PREFACE

This is a war edition of the "State Register and Manual" which has appeared year after year for one hundred and fifty seven years. The essential information usually carried has been included but some deletions and changes will be noted. The color plates will be missed. They have gone in the interest of economy. The Charter Oak Tree stands as our frontispiece, as a symbol of Connecticut stability, and as a symbol of our steadfast belief in democracy and of our willingness to pay any price necessary for its retention by a free people.

Biographical material concerning the State Officers and Representatives in Congress and the historical lists of State and Federal officers and a few other name lists have not been reprinted as they remain the same as they stand in the 1941 edition. The Almanac has not been retained as it may readily be found in other publications.

The 1941 edition contained a chart showing the structural organization of the State government. This volume carries a chart showing the structural organization of Hartford, the city in our State with the largest population. This chart and the article on the origin of the names of Connecticut towns are included in compliance with the objective, noted last year, of having each edition of the "State Register and Manual" contain some special feature of use in the schools to arouse the interest of our boys and girls in the history and government of their State and Town.

An effort has been made to provide complete lists of our more important Federal and State War Agencies. We are proud of the list of our fellow workers in the State Government who are serving the cause of freedom and of right in the armed services of our country.

The task of compiling this edition has fallen chiefly upon Helen Earle Sellers and Leonard C. Sheflott of this office.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

In Congress, July 4, 1776

THE UNANIMOUS DECLARATION of the THIRTEEN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

When, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed, by their Creator, with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.—That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate, that governments long established, should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shown, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these Colonies; and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of government. The history of the present King of Great-Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world.

He has refused his assent to laws, the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained; and when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless those people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature, a right inestimable to them, and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved representative houses repeatedly, for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused for a long time, after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large for their exercise; the State remaining, in the meantime, exposed to all the dangers of invasion from without, and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these States; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners; refusing to pass others to encourage their migrations hither, and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

He has obstructed the administration of justice, by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies, without the consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the military independent of and superior to the civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation:

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us:

For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these States:

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world:

For imposing taxes on us without our consent:

For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury:

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offences:

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries, so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these Colonies:

For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering fundamentally the forms of our governments:

For suspending our own legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated government here, by declaring us out of his protection, and waging war against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burnt our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is, at this time, transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries to complete the works of death, desolation, and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy, scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow-citizens, taken captive on the high seas, to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers, the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare, is an undistinguished destruction, of all ages, sexes, and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms: our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attentions to our British brethren. We have warned them, from time to time, of attempts by their legislature to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them by the ties of our common kindred to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably interrupt our connexions and correspondence. They too have been deaf to the voice of justice and of consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity, which denounces our separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.

We, therefore, the Representatives of the United States of America, in General Congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name, and by authority of the good people of these Colonies, solemnly publish and declare, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connexion between them and the State of Great-Britain, is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that as free and independent States, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which independent States may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honour.

*CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

WE THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, in Order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

Section 1. All legislative Powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second Year by the People of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature.

No Person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the Age of twenty five Years, and been seven Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected be an Inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

Representatives and direct Taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective Numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole Number of free Persons, including those bound to Service for a Term of Years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three fifths of all other Persons. The actual Enumeration shall be made within three Years after the first Meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent Term of ten Years, in such Manner as they shall by Law direct. The Number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty Thousand, but each State shall have at Least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to chuse three, Massachusetts eight, Rhode-Island and Providence Plantations one, Connecticut five, New York six, New Jersey four, Pennsylvania eight, Delaware one, Maryland six, Virginia ten, North Carolina five, South Carolina five and Georgia three.

When vacancies happen in the Representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue Writs of Election to fill such Vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall chuse their Speaker and other Officers; and shall have the sole Power of Impeachment.

* Connecticut ratified the Constitution Jan. 9, 1788, having been the fifth State to vote for ratification.

Section 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six Years; and each Senator shall have one Vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in Consequence of the first Election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three Classes. The Seats of the Senators of the first Class shall be vacated at the Expiration of the Second Year, of the second Class at the Expiration of the fourth Year, and of the third Class at the Expiration of the sixth Year, so that one third may be chosen every second Year; and if Vacancies happen by Resignation, or otherwise, during the Recess of the Legislature of any State, the Executive thereof may make temporary Appointments until the next Meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such Vacancies.

No Person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the Age of thirty Years, and been nine Years a Citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an Inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no Vote unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall chuse their other Officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the Absence of the Vice President, or when he shall exercise the Office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole Power to try all Impeachments. When sitting for that Purpose, they shall be on Oath or Affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside: And no Person shall be convicted without the Concurrence of two thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in Cases of Impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from Office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any Office of honor, Trust or Profit under the United States: but the Party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to Indictment, Trial, Judgment and Punishment, according to Law.

Section 4. The Times, Places and Manner of holding Elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by Law make or alter such Regulations, except as to the Places of chusing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every Year, and such Meetings shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by Law appoint a different Day.

Section 5. Each House shall be the Judge of the Elections, Returns and Qualifications of its own Members, and a Majority of each shall constitute a Quorum to do Business; but a smaller Number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the Attendance of absent Members, in such Manner, and under such Penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the Rules of its Proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly Behavior, and, with the Concurrence of two thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a Journal of its Proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such Parts as may in their Judgment require Secrecy; and the Yeas and Nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the Desire of one fifth of those Present, be entered on the Journal.

Neither House, during the Session of Congress, shall, without the Consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other Place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

Section 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a Compensation for their Services, to be ascertained by Law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the Time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil Office under the Authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the Emoluments whereof shall have been encreased during such time; and no Person holding any Office under the United States, shall be a Member of either House during his Continuance in Office.

Section 7. All Bills for raising Revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with Amendments as on other Bills.

Every Bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it become a Law, be presented to the President of the United States; If he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his Objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the Objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such Reconsideration two thirds of that House shall agree to pass the Bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two thirds of that House, it shall become a Law. But in all such Cases the Votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and Nays, and the Names of the Persons voting for and against the Bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House respectively. If any Bill shall not be returned by the President within ten Days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the Same shall be a Law, in like Manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their Adjournment prevent its Return, in which Case it shall not be a Law.

Every Order, Resolution, or Vote to which the Concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of Adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the Same shall take Effect, shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him, shall be repassed by two thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the Rules and Limitations prescribed in the Case of a Bill.

Section 8. The Congress shall have Power To lay and collect Taxes, Duties, Imposts and Excises, to pay the Debts and provide for the common Defence and general Welfare of the United States; but all Duties, Imposts and Excises shall be uniform throughout the United States; vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Section 9. No State shall, without the Consent of the Congress, lay any Imposts or Duties on Imports or Exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing it's Inspection Laws: and the net Produce of All Duties and Imposts, laid by any State on Imports or Exports, shall be for the Use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such Laws shall be subject to the Revision and Controul of the Congress.

ARTICLE II.

Section 1. The executive Power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his Office during the Term of four Years, and, together with the Vice President, chosen for the same Term, be elected, as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such Manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a Number of Electors, equal to the whole Number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative or Person holding an office of Trust or Profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by Ballot for two Persons, of whom one at least shall not be an Inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a List of all the Persons voted for, and of the Number of Votes for each; which List they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the Seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the Presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the Certificates, and the Votes shall then be counted. The Person having the greatest Number of Votes shall be the President, if such Number be a Majority of the whole Number of Electors appointed; and if there be more than one who have such Majority, and have an equal Number of Votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately chuse by Ballot one of them for President; and if no Person have a Majority, then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like Manner chuse the President. But in chusing the President, the Votes shall be taken by States, the Representation from each State having one Vote; a quorum for this Purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two third of the States, and a Majority of all the States shall be necessary to a Choice. In every Case, after the Choice of the President, the Person having the greatest Number of Votes of the Electors shall be the Vice President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal Votes, the Senate shall chuse from them by Ballot the Vice President.

The Congress may determine the Time of chusing the Electors, and the Day on which they shall give their Votes; which Day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No Person except a natural born Citizen, or a Citizen of the United States, at the time of the Adoption of this Consitution, shall be eligible to the Office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that Office who shall not have attained to the age of thirty five Years, and been fourteen Years a Resident within the United States.

In case of the Removal of the President from Office, or of his Death, Resignation, or Inability to discharge the Powers and Duties of the said Office, the Same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by Law provide for the Case of Removal, Death, Resignation or Inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what Officer shall then act as President, and such Officer shall act accordingly, until the Disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated Times, receive for his Services, a Compensation, which shall neither be encreased nor diminished during the Period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that Period any other Emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Before he enter on the Execution of his Office, he shall take the following Oath or Affirmation:—"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my Ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Section 2. The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the Militia of the several States, when called into the actual Service of the United States; he may require the Opinion, in writing, of the principal Officer in each of the executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the Duties of their respective Offices, and he shall have Power to grant Reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment.

He shall have Power, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, shall appoint Ambassadors, other public Ministers and Consuls, Judges of the supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose Appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by Law: but the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

The President shall have Power to fill up all Vacancies that may happen during the Recess of the Senate, by granting Commissions which shall expire at the End of their next Session.

Section 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary Occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in Case of Disagreement between them, with Respect to the Time of Adjournment, he may adjourn them to such Time as he shall think proper; he shall receive Ambassadors and other public Ministers; he shall take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed, and shall Commission all the Officers of the United States.

THE FIRST CONSTITUTION OF CONNECTICUT

THE "FUNDAMENTAL ORDERS," 1638-9.

"Voted" January 14, 1638, the Fundamental Orders were the beginning of Connecticut as a commonwealth. Their spirit was that of a sermon preached by the Rev. Thomas Hooker a short time before their adoption, in the course of which he laid down the proposition "The foundation of authority is laid in the free consent of the people", and which he closed with the challenge: "As God has given us liberty let us take it." They recognized no allegiance on the part of the colonists to England but in effect set up an independent government. In the sense that they were intended to be a framework of government more permanent than the usual orders adopted by the General Court, they were in essence a constitution. The historian John Fiske was justified in his statement that this instrument was "the first written constitution known to history that created a government and it marked the beginning of American democracy". While in 1662 the Fundamental Orders were in a sense superseded by the charter, that document, drawn up in the colony and taken to England by its representative, was never regarded by the colonists as the source of their government, but as a protection for and guaranty of the government they had already set up for themselves. So it was that for forty years after the independence of this nation, Connecticut could still carry on its government under the charter. And so it is that this commonwealth has preserved a continuity of development beyond that of almost any other state or nation in the world.

Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Almighty God by the wise disposition of his divine providence so to order and dispose of things that we the Inhabitants and Residents of Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield are now cohabiting and dwelling in and upon the River of Connectecotte and the lands thereunto adjoining; and well knowing where a people are gathered together the word of God requires that to maintain the peace and union of such a people there should be an orderly and decent Government established according to God, to order and dispose of the affairs of the people at all seasons as occasion shall require; do therefore associate and conjoin ourselves to be as one Public State or Commonwealth; and do for ourselves and our Successors and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter, enter into Combination and Confederation together, to maintain and preserve the liberty and purity of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus which we now profess, as also the discipline of the Churches, which according to the truth of the said Gospel is now practiced amongst us; as also in our Civil affairs to be guided and governed according to such Laws, Rules, Orders, and Decrees as shall be made, ordered, and decreed, as followeth:—

1. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that there shall be yearly two General Assemblies or Courts, the one the second Thursday in April, the other the second Thursday in September following; the first shall be called the Court of Election, wherein shall be yearly chosen from time to time so many Magistrates and other public Officers as shall be found requisite: Whereof one to be chosen Governor for the year ensuing and until another be chosen, and no other Magistrate to be chosen for more than one year; provided always there be six chosen besides the Governor, which being chosen and sworn according to an Oath recorded for that purpose, shall have power to administer justice according to the Laws here established, and for want thereof, according to the rule of the Word of God; which choice shall be made by all that are admitted freemen and have taken the Oath of Fidelity, and do cohabit within this Jurisdiction (*Having been admitted Inhabitants by the major part of the Town wherein they live) or the major part of such as shall be then present.

2. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the Election of the aforesaid Magistrates shall be on this manner: every person present and qualified for choice shall bring in (to the persons deputed to receive them) one single paper with the name of him written in it whom he desires to have Governor, and he that hath the greatest number of papers shall be Governor for that year. And the rest of the Magistrates or public officers to be chosen in this manner: the Secretary for the time being shall first read the names of all that are to be put to choice and then shall severally nominate them distinctly, and every one that would have the person nominated to be chosen shall bring in one single paper written upon, and he that would not have him chosen shall bring in a blank; and every one that hath more written papers than blanks shall be a Magistrate for that year; which papers shall be received and told by one or more that shall be then chosen by the court and sworn to be faithful therein; but in case there should not be six chosen as aforesaid, besides the Governor, out of those which are nominated, then he or they which have the most written papers shall be a Magistrate or Magistrates for the ensuing year, to make up the aforesaid number.

3. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the Secretary shall not nominate any person, nor shall any person be chosen newly into the Magistracy which was not propounded in some General Court before, to be nominated the next Election; and to that end it shall be lawful for each of the Towns aforesaid by their deputies to nominate any two whom they conceive fit to be put to election; and the Court may add so many more as they judge requisite.

4. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that no person be chosen Governor above once in two years, and that the Governor be always a member of some approved congregation, and formerly of the Magistracy within this Jurisdiction; and all the Magistrates, Freemen of this Commonwealth; and that no Magistrate or other public officer shall execute any part of his or their office before they are severally sworn, which shall be done in the face of the court if they be present, and in case of absence by some deputed for that purpose.

5. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that to the aforesaid Court of Election the several Towns shall send their deputies, and when the Elections are ended they may proceed in any public service as at other Courts. Also the other General Court in September shall be for making of laws, and any other public occasion, which concerns the good of the Commonwealth.

6. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that the Governor shall, either by himself or by the secretary, send out summons to the Constables of every Town for the calling of these two standing Courts one month at least before their several times: And also if the Governor and the greatest part of the Magistrates see cause upon any special occasion to call a General Court, they may give order to the Secretary so to do within fourteen days' warning: and if urgent necessity so require, upon a shorter notice, giving sufficient grounds for it to the deputies when they meet, or else be questioned for the same; And if the Governor and major part of Magistrates shall either neglect or refuse to call the two General standing Courts or either of them, as also at other times when the occasions of the Commonwealth require, the Freemen thereof, or the major part of them, shall petition to them so to do; if then it be either denied or neglected, the said Freemen, or the major part of them, shall have power to give order to the Constables of the several Towns to do the same, and so may meet together, and choose to themselves a Moderator, and may proceed to do any act of power which any other General Courts may.

7. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that after there are warrants given out for any of the said General Courts, the Constable or Constables of each Town shall forthwith give notice distinctly to the inhabitants of the same, in some public assembly or by going or sending from house to house, that at a place and time by him or them limited and set, they meet and assemble themselves together to elect and choose certain deputies to be at the General Court then following to agitate the affairs of the Commonwealth; which said deputies shall be chosen by all that are admitted Inhabitants in the several Towns and have taken the oath of fidelity; provided that none be chosen a Deputy for any General Court which is not a Freeman of this Commonwealth.

The aforesaid deputies shall be chosen in manner following: every person that is present and qualified as before expressed, shall bring the names of such, written in several papers, as they desire to have chosen for that employment, and these three or four, more or less, being the number agreed on to be chosen for that time, that have greatest number of papers written for them shall be deputies for that Court; whose names shall be endorsed on the back side of the warrant and returned into the Court, with the constable or constables' hand unto the same.

8. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that Windsor, Hartford, and Wethersfield shall have power, each Town, to send four of their Freemen as their deputies to every General Court; and Whatsoever other Town shall be hereafter added to this Jurisdiction, they shall send so many deputies as the Court shall judge meet, a reasonable proportion to the number of Freemen that are in the said Towns being to be attended therein; which deputies shall have the power of the whole Town to give their votes and allowance to all such laws and orders as may be for the public good, and unto which the said Towns are to be bound.

9. It is Ordered and decreed, that the deputies thus chosen shall have power and liberty to appoint a time and a place of meeting together before any General Court, to advise and consult of all such things as may concern the good of the public, as also to examine their own Elections, whether according to the order, and if they or the greatest part of them find any election to be illegal they may seclude such for present from their meeting, and return the same and their reasons to the Court; and if it prove true, the Court may fine the party or parties so intruding, and the Town, if they see cause, and give out a warrant to go to a new election in a legal way, either in part or in whole. Also the said deputies shall have power to fine any that shall be disorderly at their meetings, or for not coming in due time or place according to appointment; and they may return the said fines into the Court if it be refused to be paid, and the Treasurer to take notice of it, and to escheat or levy the same as he does other fines.

10. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that every General Court, except such as through neglect of the Governor and the greatest part of Magistrates the Freemen themselves do call, shall consist of the Governor, or some one chosen to moderate the Court, and four other Magistrates at least, with the major part of the deputies of the several Towns legally chosen; and in case the Freemen, or major part of them, through neglect or refusal of the Governor and major part of the Magistrates, shall call a Court, it shall consist of the major part of Freemen that are present or their deputies, with a Moderator chosen by them: In which said General Courts shall consist the supreme power of the Commonwealth, and they only shall have power to make laws or repeal them, to grant levies, to admit of Freemen, dispose of lands undisposed of, to several Towns or persons, and also shall have power to call either Court or Magistrate or any other person whatsoever into question for any misdemeanor, and may for just causes displace or deal otherwise according to the nature of the offense; and also may deal in any other matter that concerns the good of this Commonwealth, except election of Magistrates, which shall be done by the whole body of Freemen.

In which Court the Governor or Moderator shall have power to order the Court, to give liberty of speech, and silence unseasonable and disorderly speakings, to put all things to vote, and in case the vote be equal to have the casting voice. But none of these Courts shall be adjourned or dissolved without the consent of the major part of the Court.

11. It is Ordered, sentenced, and decreed, that when any General Court upon the occasions of the Commonwealth have agreed upon any sum, or sums of money to be levied upon the several Towns within this Jurisdiction, that a committee be chosen to set out and appoint what shall be the proportion of every Town to pay of the said levy, provided the committee be made up of an equal number out of each Town.

14th January 1638 the 11 Orders above said are voted.

THE CONSTITUTION OF CONNECTICUT*

As amended and in force July 1, 1942

Though the people of the state had long acquiesced under the form of government derived from the charter, and sanctioned by the legislature; yet it was considered by many that we had no constitution, as our government under the charter had never received the explicit approbation of the people subsequent to the declaration of independence. It was also considered to be inconsistent with the dignity of a free nation to hold their rights, even nominally by the tenure of a Royal Grant and that it was proper the powers of the government should be divided into separate departments, and individual rights be secured by a constitution that should control the legislature itself. It was therefore thought advisable to call a convention for that object. Accordingly, in 1818, a convention was assembled which agreed upon a constitution. It was submitted to the people, and approved by a vote of thirteen thousand nine hundred and eighteen in its favor and twelve thousand three hundred and sixty-four against its ratification. On the twelfth of October, 1818, Governor Wolcott issued his proclamation, at the request of the General Assembly, declaring that the constitution was thenceforth to be observed by all persons, as the Supreme Law of this state.

On October 1, 1901 a vote was taken as to the calling of a constitutional convention for the purpose of revising the constitution. The vote was 47,317 in favor and 26,745 against. A convention was held, a revised constitution proposed and a vote taken June 16, 1902 as to its adoption with the result of 10,377 for the acceptance of such revision and 21,234 against it.

PREAMBLE

The people of Connecticut acknowledging with gratitude, the good providence of God, in having permitted them to enjoy a free government, do, in order more effectually to define, secure, and perpetuate the liberties, rights and privileges which they have derived from their ancestors, hereby, after a careful consideration

DISTRIBUTIVE EDUCATION

James A. Dorsey, State Supervisor of Distributive Education, Hartford.

Distributive Education is vocational education for those intending to enter the field of retailing as a career, and for those who are already employed in a distributive occupation. It is practical training designed to improve the performance of the pupils who are to enter this field and the employees who are now there.

There are four types of courses available under this program:

1. Cooperative part-time course—usually given to high school seniors who are required to obtain “laboratory experience” by working 15 hours weekly at a distributive occupation.
2. Evening extension courses—provided for the regularly employed personnel in retailing.
3. Part-time courses—made available during the work day for clerks who are given time off and are paid by the employer to attend such classes.
4. Pre-employment courses—available during the war emergency to untrained persons who intend entering this occupation and where a demand for such training exists.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION SERVICE

E. P. Chester, State Supervisor of Vocational Rehabilitation, Hartford.

Vocational Rehabilitation Service is provided without cost to physically handicapped citizens of the state, sixteen years of age or over. The primary service is vocational adjustment by a process of preparation for available employment suited to the individual's physical and mental equipment. The rehabilitation program does not stop until the disabled person actually goes to work.

Instructional supplies and equipment, as well as artificial appliances when needed, are provided.

Vocational Rehabilitation was originally conceived as a service supplementing Workmen's Compensation. It now also covers persons whose disabilities are incurred as the result of accidents other than industrial, as the result of disease, or from congenital causes.

In an attempt to meet the need for more workers in war production, great effort is being made to prepare and place in defense industries as many workers as possible with various physical impairments.

TOWN AND CITY GOVERNMENT IN CONNECTICUT

The place of municipalities in our governmental structure has been described in the "Outline of the Structural Organization of the State and Local Government of Connecticut" in these words: "Municipalities are essentially administrative instrumentalities of the state carrying out state laws applicable to them; and, at the same time, they are policy determining units making, in the exercise of powers granted by state constitution or statute, ordinances or by-laws of their own to enact specific policies in conformity with the general and special policies of the state."

Counties, cities and towns are creatures of the legislature and may be altered, abolished and empowered as the legislature sees fit, subject only to any limitations imposed by the state constitution. Connecticut towns and cities are organized and administered under several different forms, but all of the variations are essentially expansions of and are roughly analogous to an original basic form, that is, the administration of the affairs of the town by a board of selectmen, with the electors in town meeting acting as a legislative body.

In addition to the traditional basic form of town government, some of the variations are towns with boards of finance, towns consolidated with cities or boroughs, cities and boroughs not consolidated with their towns, towns with town managers, with town councils or with town councils and town managers. Further political subdivisions incorporated within the boundaries of towns may include independent school districts, fire districts, fire and sewer districts, lighting districts, sanitary districts, water districts and improvement association districts. The Metropolitan District set up within the county of Hartford was organized by special act in 1929. The district deals with matters pertaining to streets and highways, sewer and water supply and regional planning within its territorial limits. It includes the city of Hartford and the towns of Bloomfield, Newington, Wethersfield, Windsor and Rocky Hill.

Of the 21 cities 14 are consolidated or coextensive with their towns. One city has the city manager form of government. In one city the first selectman is ex-officio mayor of the city and there are no other special city officers.

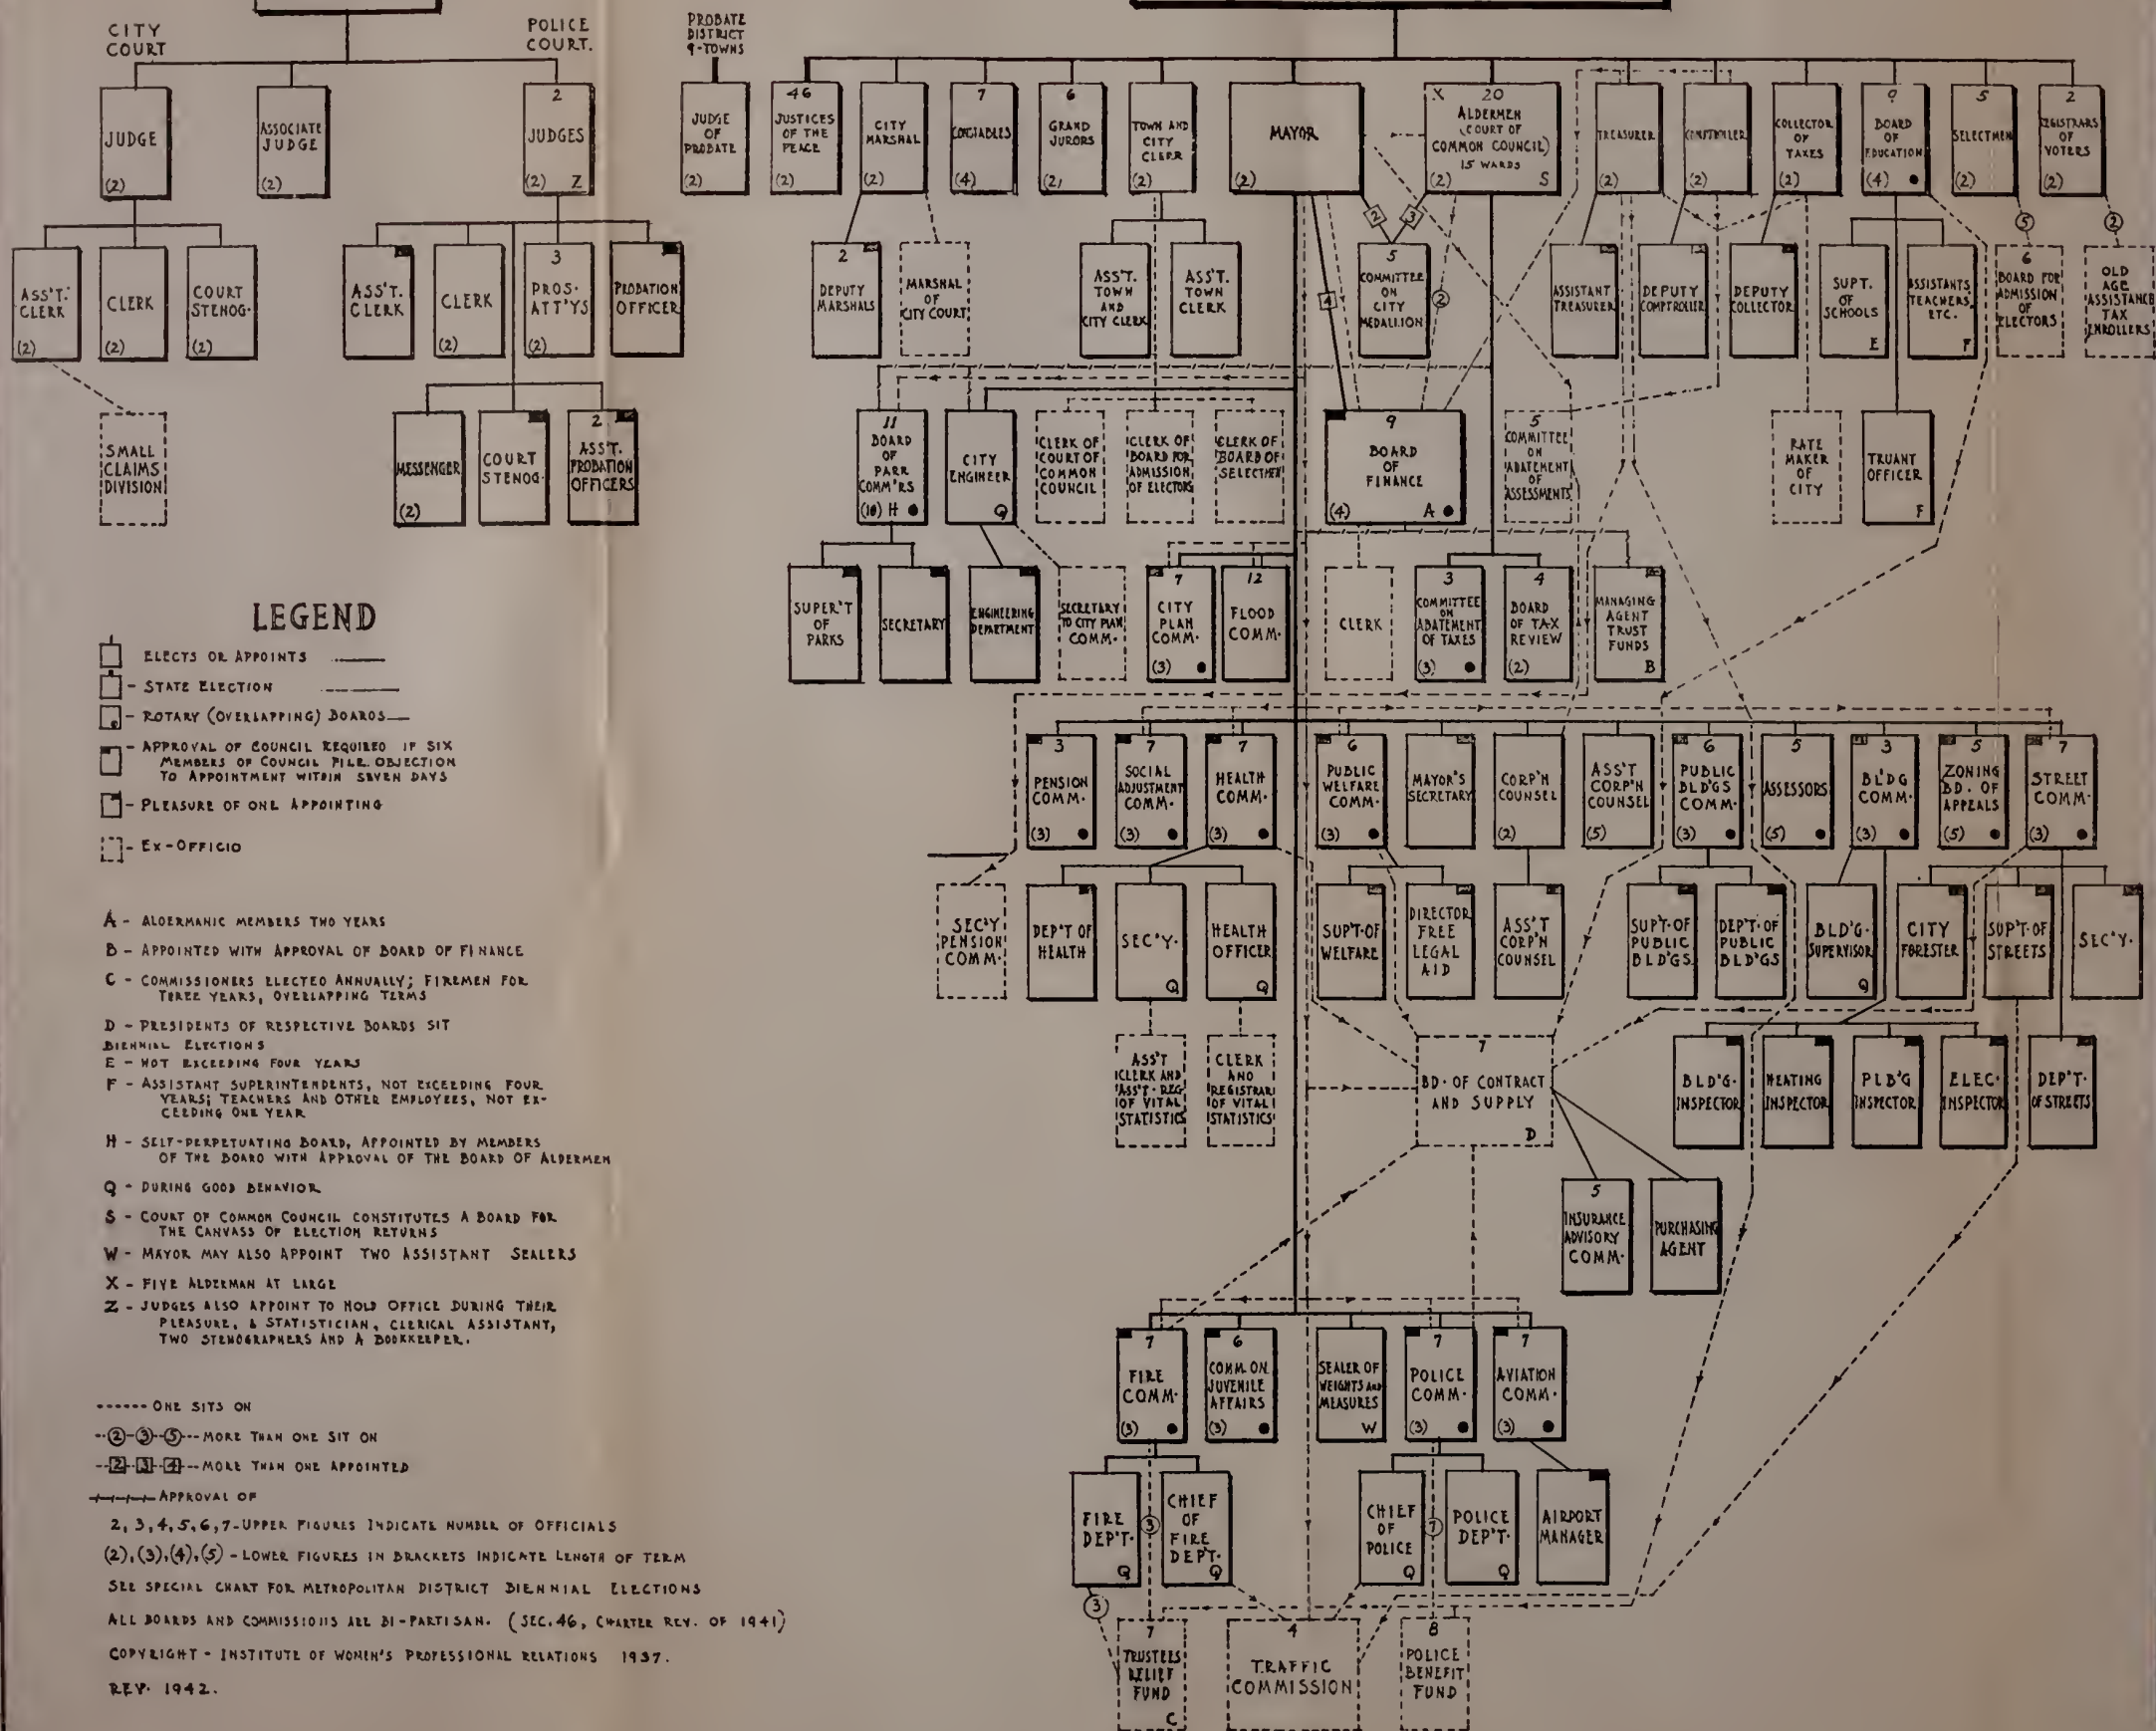

The other 19 cities have the mayor and council form of government. The council consists of a board of aldermen or of councilmen elected at large in the greater number of cases, or by wards, or in part by wards, in part at large, except in three cities where there is both a board of aldermen and a board of councilmen elected by wards.

In 11 cities the great majority of appointments are made by the mayor, in three others by the mayor with the confirmation of the council. In the other five cities the council has considerable control over appointments.

TOWNS, CITIES AND BOROUGHS

The following list of municipal officers and Justices of the Peace was compiled from returns filed with the Secretary by the local municipal clerks through May 15, 1942. Where the name of the post-office or express office address of the town clerk, town treasurer or first selectman is other than that of the town itself, it is given.

Statistics of towns, cities and boroughs are also secured from the clerks of the several municipalities annually, and upon them we depend for the accuracy of the data herein set forth. The area of the towns is taken from the 1902 report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. These are the only complete data available and are quoted with the exception of those corrections made by the town clerks. The populations of towns are taken from the 1940 United States Census. The children are those between the ages of 4 and 16 enumerated October 1, 1941. The grand lists are taken from returns filed with the tax commissioner for the year 1941. In order to comply with the ruling of the War Department on the issuance of published material, the customary listing of the industries carried on in the various towns has been omitted for this year.

ORIGINS OF THE NAMES OF THE CONNECTICUT TOWNS¹

HELEN EARLE SELLERS

"To perpetuate the annals of a retired New England town may seem to some a trifling affair. But there is nothing dearer, to a man of sensibility, than his home." The Honorable Samuel Church, in a historical address given at the Centennial Celebration in Salisbury on July 4, 1876.

"Deo, patriae, municipio tuo, semper esto fidelis"—"To thy God, thy country and thy town, be always faithful." Motto chosen for Norfolk by Professor Thatcher of Yale.

In New England, the town is an important unit of government. The town meeting is its functioning body. It is a little entity, perfected by the colonists as they went along, much as they worked out the relation between a government of their towns and that of the Colony, by trial, by error and by a vigorous adherence to the principles of practical justice which they had left the mother country to achieve.

Very early, even before there were any established towns in Connecticut, a representative government was set up at Hartford. It consisted of an arrangement between the three little settlements at Hartford, Wethersfield and Windsor, each of which believed itself still a part of the Massachusetts Colony. But because they were so much nearer one another than to any Massachusetts settlement, and because the dangers of the wilderness were so much a matter of common significance among them, they turned to one another for mutual support. On April 26, 1636, the first common government was set up at "Newton", now Hartford. It was made up of two representatives chosen from each of the settlements, and was called the General Court. Later, with enlarged powers, it was to be the General Court of Election and eventually the General Assembly. This was the beginning of government by representation in Connecticut, with each settlement, loosely called a town, acting for the first time as an autonomous body and choosing its governing men.

Many of Connecticut's one hundred and sixty-nine towns have passed through similar periods of development. Each at first was only a settlement of farms, the earliest fairly close together, not only for protection, but to enable participation in "meeting."

Next it was generally established as an ecclesiastical Society, for these settlers had come from England and Massachusetts not only to escape religious intolerance but to establish the Puritan or Congregational form of worship. The first vote recorded in any town is almost always of church matters.

After a sufficient number of neighbors felt that they were able to support a minister and perhaps look forward to building a meeting house of their own, they applied to the General Court to be established as a Parish, for the Court at Hartford had provided by Act of March 11, 1657/8 that "henceforth no persons in the Jurisdiction [of Connecticut Colony] shall in any way imbody themselves into Ch: estat without consent of the Court & approbation of the neighbor Chs." The Court then considered the request, usually appointing a committee to "view the circumstances" (See East Granby, Clinton), and to report a consideration of the claim to a later Session. If the report were favorable, ecclesiastical rights and privileges were granted, and the parish was named, sometimes a name of its own choosing, sometimes a name chosen by the Court. As the population grew, very often the neighbors of a locality within it would petition for "privileges." A second Society so established sometimes became a town in its own right. (See Bristol, Ellington). Attendance at meeting was obligatory, and the location of the meeting house determined the later location of community centers more than did any other one thing.

Many parishes had their beginnings in the establishment of "winter privileges". If what were judged a sufficient number of persons were prevented from attendance during the severe weather, permission to hire a minister for the winter months could be granted by the General Court. Taxes to the established Society were usually rebated for the period, (See Southington) and the Sabbath Day services held in a house agreed upon by the petitioners until the meeting house could be built. This would often result in the establishment of a permanent parish. (See Berlin, Marlborough, Roxbury).

Later, the parishes were incorporated as towns. The name first chosen sometimes prevailed, more often was changed. Not all parishes became towns.

That is how settlement in most cases happened to come before names, though exception must be made in particular of seven of the towns in the "Western Lands" in Litchfield County, and some others. These seven were sold at auction by order of the General Court of 1737. Here the implication is clear, though documentary evidence is missing, that these towns already had had euphonious and pleasantly suggestive names: Kent, Canaan, Sharon, Cornwall, Norfolk, Goshen and Salisbury, picked out for them, perhaps by the committee of the General Court appointed to lay them out. Four are named for places in England, well known and of unusual interest, three for their happy Biblical connotations,—all entirely in the manner of any modern real-estate agent.

Every town has its individuality, has had a history peculiar to itself and a special train of incidents that led up to its incorporation, choice of name and recognition thereby. The choice of name is very closely integrated with the early life of its people.

A far smaller proportion of the towns in Connecticut are named directly from the English towns than in Massachusetts because a far smaller proportion of the settlers came here directly from England. Cotton Mather, who died in Boston in 1728, said of New England in general, "the reason why most of our towns are called what they are, is because the chief of the first inhabitants wouldbear up the names of the particular places there from whence they came." And this was true of his time, when most of the settlers were English-born, but it was not true of the generations to follow, when the actual memory of places in England had thinned down to hearsay, and life and activity were becoming centered in a new world. In the case of the English place-names, most of which were given before 1750, the clue is in the origin of the settlers' families, but this is often difficult, sometimes impossible to trace.

Local topographical peculiarities certainly played at least a secondary role in the selection of the names, as Dean Arthur Hughes of Trinity College, authority on Connecticut place-names, has pointed out, "inasmuch as they suggested to the Colonists English place-names they might not otherwise have thought of, as may be true of Ashford, where ash-trees abounded, or of Milford, where, in the year of its naming, William Fowler was building his celebrated mill by the ford."

Professor Harry Morgan Ayres of Columbia likewise points out that the bestowers of place-names were always pleased when a traditional name fitted the local conditions. Andover, beyond point of doubt, was named from Andover, Massachusetts, and that town in turn from the English town. But there is no doubt, either, that it was "over-and-over" the hills from its neighbors, and so described. Norwalk again, is more or less aptly a day's "north-walk" from the coast, and the phrase appears in an early deed. But there is no evidence to prove that this was the primary reason for the selection of the name. It might well be a corruption of "Norruck", the English attempt to pronounce the name of the Indian tribe which lived thereabouts.

The Indian names, in Dean Hughes' opinion, were never intended by the Indians to be applied, as the white men subsequently applied them, to large tracts of land. The Indian names meant, and referred to something in nature small, specific and localized. "Suckiag", for instance, the name applied by the white men to the whole region around Hartford and East Hartford, was used by the Indians to indicate merely those meadows along the river having black or dark-colored earth. Names of places were often taken from the names of the tribes who lived there, and vice versa.

As Indian was not a written but a spoken language, its spelling is often a matter of astonishing versatility. Indeed, because of mutilation of the Indian names by Colonial scribes and by the Colonial pronunciation it is frequently impossible to arrive at any definite conclusion with regard to the original meaning. And the variety of dialects, even in the Algonquin tribe, varied greatly, even among those living within thirty or forty miles of one another. This added greatly to the complications of spelling Indian words in English. "We Massachusetts", says John Eliot, in his Indian Grammar Begun, "pronounce the n, the Nupmuck Indians pronounce l, and the northern Indians pronounce r." In the same way, in Connecticut, the Mohegan and Narragansetts said "Quinnipiac", meaning the long-water country about New Haven; the Connecticut River tribes called it "Quillipiac", while the tribe that lived there referred to themselves as "Quiripi", a choice likewise favored by the Dutch. Clearly, the English did very well to reproduce at all a liquid that had, in their speech, only a choice of imperfect equivalents.

To add to the confusion, the white men continually applied Indian names to features of the landscape that were not at all in the Indian mind when they coined the word. Thus a word meaning a hill might be applied by the white men to all the surrounding territory and come eventually to mean a pond.

And so the Indian names, or their Indian approximates, have come down to us not in the names of the towns, which the white men were creating in the tradition of their own race, but in features of the countryside, streams, mountains, hills and other natural aspects. Not many of his Colonial contemporaries would have endorsed Roger Williams' statement in 1643 that "There is a savour of civility and courtesie even amongst these wild Americans, both amongst themselves and towards strangers." The general unwillingness of the English Colonials to constitute themselves towns under the Indian names was due to the fact that the Indians were regarded for the most part not only as potential enemies, but as barbarians and "heathen." Naugatuck, Norwalk and Willimantic (See Mansfield) are conspicuous exceptions.

The Colonial Records, of course, give no reasons for choice of name, though to that New London, Colchester, Suffield and Woodstock (named by Massachusetts) must be exceptions. Records of town meetings sometimes state the choice and record the vote, but the reasons in most cases must be left to conjecture. No one person was, like Captain John Smith in Virginia, "like unto Adam. . . [to]. . . give names to all the places we saw."

And as for New England herself, "Of the scituation, bounds and rivers. . . ." wrote the Reverend William Hubbard, "At the first accounted no distinct country of itself, as worthy of a proper name of its owne, [she] was taken onely for a part of Virginia: But it is of late discovered to bee a country of too large a compasse any longer to lacky after any other sister, though elder than herselfe, and therefore deservedly accounted as one of the principall daughters of the Chief Lady of the European world, from whence she is descended."

ANDOVER: Deriv.: from an old name of the Anton, containing the river-name Ann, and a derivative of the British dubro, water. In appreciation of his services in exterminating the Pequots, the General Court of May 14, 1663 "graunts unto the Major, Or Dep'ty Gouvernr [John Mason] 500 acres of land for a farme where he shall chuse it", and on October 13 of the following year this was taken up by him "at a place by the Indians called Pomakuck". Settled in 1718 largely by families from Windsor and Enfield, the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society were granted in May 1747 to petitioners from parts of the first and second Societies in Coventry, part of the Second Society in Lebanon, and part of the inhabitants of Hebron. Incorporated as a separate town the following year Andover was named from Andover, Massachusetts, which, in turn, had been named from Andover in Hampshire, England, the home of some of the early settlers.

ANSONIA: Settled about 1651, as that part of ancient Derby called the Little Neck, a section formed by the Naugatuck River and Beaver Brook, its south part was called Plum Meadow, and its upper part, the North End. Incorporated as a separate town in 1889, it was named for Anson G. Phelps, a large owner of land and water power and member in the firm of Phelps, Dodge and Co., which established the village as a manufacturing center about 1884.

ASHFORD: Deriv.: Ash-tree ford. The General Court of May 9, 1706 "being informed that there is a good tract of land within this Colony westward of the town of Woodstock, northward of the town of Mansfield. . . . which. . . . this Court being willing to secure for such good people as shall be willing to settle thereon, do, therefore, grant a township there, of the extent and bigness of 8 miles square." This was in country also conveyed to Major Fitch by Owaneco in 1684. (See Canterbury). The south part was laid out in 1707 by John Cushing and David Jacob of Scituate, Massachusetts, under the name of the New Scituate plantation. Three years later, "a place called Mount Hope, lying on the river," the site of the present village of Warrenville, was bought by John Mixer of Canterbury. The Society of New Scituate became a town in 1714, when it was named Ashford, probably for Ashford in Kent, the home in England of a number of the early colonists. Wabbaquassett was its Indian name, a term originally applied to any particular locality where the Indians obtained flag used for making mats.

AVON: Deriv.: from a common river-name, Abona, the source of the Welsh, Afon, with which it is identical.

Probably settled about 1645 as the northern part of ancient Farmington, the ecclesiastical Society, or Parish, of Northington was granted privileges here by the General Assembly of May 1750, and defined as being "on or near the divisions of land called Nod Divisions." Probably named from the river that flows through Stratford, England, a locality from which some of the early settlers came, Avon was incorporated as an independent town in May, 1830. (See Bristol, Plainville). There is an Indian word, noadt, which means far, far off, a great way off, and one of the early spellings was Node, indicating an early pronunciation. To the Massacoes at Manatuck, as well as to the early white settlers from Windsor, the south, or Farmington bounds would have been 'far off'—hence the application of the Indian term Anglicized to Nod.

Northington was from North(Farm)ington.

BARKHAMSTED: Deriv.: Bark-ham or -homm: enclosure or water-meadow; where birch grew. A part of the Western Lands (See Cornwall, Colebrook), this section was included in that great tract covering nearly all of what is now Litchfield County that was made over at a Special Session of the General Court, called by Governor Robert Treat at Hartford on January 26, 1686, to the towns of Hartford and Windsor in the fear of its appropriation for the Crown by Sir Edmund Andros. In May 1726, in order to settle claims that had grown up between the Colony and those towns, a division of these lands was authorized by the Court. Half was granted to the Colony for sale and settlement, the remaining half divided between Hartford and Windsor. The land comprising the present Barkhamsted was included in that given to Windsor, the proprietors of which granted it out to 108 persons of that town in 1732. The Court in the same year determined that the 20,531 acres "bounding eastwardly on the town of Symsbury" were "hereby named, and shall for ever hereafter be called and named Berkhamstead." This spelling was retained in the minutes of its various meetings until the autumn of 1753, when it becomes Barkhampstead, and so remains until the change to the present spelling about 1795. (See Torrington).

Named from Berkhamsted, pronounced Barkhamsted, in Hertfordshire, the original home of a number of the settlers of New England, when "er" was pronounced "ar", "clerk", "clark", "Derby", "Darby", "Hertford", "Hartford", etc.

BEACON FALLS: In 1693, a large tract of land now in the northwestern part of this town was sold to a freed slave, Toby, (family of Ebenezer Johnson) for £10 and a barrel of cider, by the Paugasuck Indians. The name first appears in the Acts of 1864, when a joint school district so named was formed by persons from the towns of Bethany and Oxford. It seems to have been in use locally since about 1856, and is descriptive of the falls in the Naugatuck River between Beacon Mountain and Toby's Neck. The General Assembly of May 1871, constituted this a town covering territory taken from Bethany, Naugatuck, Oxford and Seymour.

Paugasuck: at a place where the narrows widen out. The suffix 'uck', 'aucke', 'awk', 'ett', 'ic' and so on, indicates in the Algonquin dialects, the place where.

BERLIN: On October 8, 1668, the General Assembly granted to Sergeant Richard Beckley of New Haven "Three Hundred Acres of land lyeing by Mattabesett Riuer, halfe a mile wide on both sides . . . and to runn vp from New Haven path so farr till it doth con-tayne three hundred acres"—probably to confirm the earlier purchase from the Indian Sachem Terramaugus. The first settlement was at the Great Swamp in 1686, the fourteen families walking "10 to 12 miles to meeting at Farmington, the women carrying their infants in their arms." To relieve them of this hardship they were established as the Second Society of Farmington in 1712. In 1722 the parish was divided, the families to the east organizing the parish of Worthington. Set off as a town from parts of Wethersfield, Farmington and Middletown in 1785, it was named from Berlin, Prussia, the capital of Frederick the Great, who had been an ally of England and her Colonies in the Seven Years' War. (See Bristol, Plainville).

BETHANY: Deriv.: Hebrew: house of dates. St. Luke, 24, 50: "And he led them out as far as Bethany, and he lifted up his hands, and blessed them." Probably settled about 1700, "Upon the memorial of . . . inhabitants of the northern part of the parish of Amity in the town of New Haven", a committee was appointed by the Assembly of May 1762, to "repair to said parish, view the circumstances thereof . . . hear all parties, and make report of what they shall find . . . respecting the memorialists being made a distinct society and report to this Assembly at their sessions at New Haven in October next." Upon report of the committee "representing the inconveniences they were under in attending the public worship &c.", parish privileges were granted in October 1762, "and it shall be called and known by the name of Bethany." In May 1832, the parish became a separate town, the boundaries and name remaining unchanged.

BETHEL: Deriv.: Hebrew: House of God. Genesis 28: 16-17-18: "And Jacob awaked out of his sleep, and he said, Surely the Lord is in this place. . . this is none other but the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven. . . And he called the name of that place Bethel." After an investigation by a committee requested in May 1759, the Assembly of October of that year authorized that the parts of Danbury called the New Society "are hereby made into a distinct ecclesiastical society which shall be called and known by the name of Bethel." In May 1855, Bethel was incorporated as an independent town, retaining the Biblical parish name. In 1869, Grassy Plains Street, in the south part of Danbury, was set off to Bethel.

BETHLEHEM: Deriv.: Hebrew: house of bread. Land here was bought from the Indians in 1710. It was settled as the part of Woodbury known as the North Purchase. In October 1739 the Court granted inhabitants here parish privileges and the name of Bethlehem, then spelled as it was pronounced, Bethlem. A further part of adjoining Woodberry was set off to Bethlehem by the General Assembly of May 1741, and incorporated as a town in 1787.

BLOOMFIELD: This town was settled as a part of Windsor, possibly as early as 1660, when the deed of an Indian purchase speaks of this section as "the wilderness." "Spies"—the early name used for those explorers sent out from a town to report on a tract (See Hebron)—returned to say there was "good land sufficient for the maintenance of three families", probably, as land was laid out in those days, for three large farming districts. The first settlement was known as Messenger's Farms and it was under this title that a petition for winter privileges went up to the General Court of May 1734. These were granted, and by Act of October 1736, it was established as the Parish of Wintonbury, a combination of Win-dsor, Farming-ton and Sims-bury. It contained also a part of Poquonnock Society in Windsor. In May 1835, it was incorporated as a separate town, and given the descriptive name, tradition says at the suggestion of Senator Francis C. Gillette.

BOLTON: Deriv.: from Bothilton or Bcelton: bold: house or dwelling; and tun: town. By an Act of May 1718, the General Assembly regulated the settlement of "a plantation on the mountain east of Hartford", and the district was opened for general settlement. The original settlers, who had come about 1716, were legatees of Attawanhood (Joshua) Sachem, (See Mansfield, Hebron, Columbia), and the newcomers were directed to reimburse them for "so much as the land was made better for their improvement." It was known early as Hartford Mountains, and the name Hanover had also been adopted in deference to the new reigning house of England and was in general use. When the town sent its petition to the General Assembly in 1720, however, the name Bolton—perhaps for the Duke of Bolton—was substituted, a change which may have reflected the political opinions of Governor Saltonstall. Bolton as a place-name is fairly common in England.

BOZRAH: Deriv.: Hebrew: sheep fold, enclosure, or rural town. Micah: 2, 12: "I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold; they shall make a great noise by reason of the multitude of men." Settled as a part of the original nine-mile square of Norwich and of the Parish of West Farms, Bozrah was set off and bounded as the Parish of New Concord or the Fourth Society of Norwich in 1737. In 1786, a request to be made a town with the name of Bath from the famous watering-place in England, was sent to the General Assembly. But the Biblical name was given preference, and the town so incorporated.

BRANFORD: A deed to all the land within the limits of this town was secured to the white men from Montoese, Sachem of the Mattabeseck Indians in 1638, a few days after the purchase of Quinnipiac (New Haven). It was called by the Indian name, Totoket. Then: "Att a Genrll Court held the 1t of the 7th moneth 1640, The plantation of Totokett is granted to Mr. Samuella Eaton [brother of the governor] for such friends as he shall bring over from olde England, and upon such tearmes as shall be agreed betwixt himselfe & the committy."—a condition Mr. Eaton never fulfilled. Consequently the Court "held at Newhaven the 25th of March 1644...ordered thatt they to whome the affayres of the town is intrusted shall dispose of Totokett according as in their wisdome they see cause".

It was subsequently granted to Mr. Swayne and some others in Wethersfield, "strict Congregationall men, they repaying the charges, which are between £12 and £13". Settlement began almost at once. Parish privileges were granted in October 1686, the Court declaring "theire great readyness to encorieg so good a worke." Named in 1653 for Brentford, on the river Brent in Kent County, England and spelled for a long time Brandford, it was set off from New Haven as a separate town in 1685.

Totoket, deriv.: uncertain. Branford Point was Mulliner's Neck, named for an early settler.

BRIDGEPORT: The possibilities for settlement here were first recognized by Roger Ludlow and his men while pursuing the Pequots to their doom in the Great Swamp Fight of 1636. Settlement probably began in 1639. "This vicinity of Poquonnock" sent in a "passionate petition" to the General Court of 1690 for parish privileges, representing that it pertained in part to the town of Fairfield and in part to Stratford, and had "grown more populous than before in capacity to stand within ourselves without running6 or 7 miles (to meeting) on one hand, and at least 4 on the other." Ecclesiastical independence was granted. A part of the settlement continued to be known as Pequonock until 1694, and as Fairfield Village from that date until 1701, when it was changed by the General Court to Stratfield. The present business section, first known as New Pasture Point, was officially named Newfield in 1777. The name Bridgeport arrived by a sort of evolution, with reference to the three bridges across the river, Pixlee's, (built in 1783), Benjamin's and the Lottery, and because by 1880, when the river was named, it had become "a lively port." Pequonnock, (Pauqu'un-auke) was a name common to all cleared land, i.e. that from which trees and brush had been removed to fit it for cultivation. (See Stratford, Fairfield, Westport).

BRIDGEWATER: Early known as the Neck, this town was settled about 1734 as the southern part of New Milford, and incorporated as Bridgewater Parish in 1856. The first bridge ever built across the Housatonic, and from which parish and town were named (1803) was finished in July 1737.

BRISTOL: Deriv.: the site of the lodge, or bridge. On April 9, 1650, a formal release was made from Sequassen, Sachem, to the town of Farmington "& to yeir eighres and sucesours forever" of a parcel of land now covered by the towns of Farmington, Avon, Burlington, Bristol, Southington, Plainville, nearly the whole of New Britain and Berlin, and a part of Wolcott. This first treaty states further that "It is cleare that the peace & plenty that they [the Indians] have had & Inioyed by the presence of ye English In regard of proteckting of them & trade with them Make More to ye advantage & Comfort of the Indians....Then ever they Inioyed before the Coming of the Inglish when all ye Lands was in their owne disposal...& therefore...they have Reason to Live Lovingly among them...& this wee....ackNoledg & so Ingage ourselles to Make No Quarrels." A map affixed to the deed shows that the boundaries coincide in general with those of the grant of 1674 from the General Court. In 1663, Farmington granted to four men, "fforty acors of meddow Land Lying att the place we commonly Call Poland". In 1664 a small grant of what is now East Bristol was made to two others, and on May 22, 1672, Farmington proprietors took formal possession of the land west of their central settlement. Locally known, with Burlington, as Farmington West Woods, ecclesiastical privileges were granted to the parish of New Cambridge in Farmington in May 1744, and in 1785 the whole section was incorporated as a town and named for Bristol, in Gloucestershire, England, the home of a large number of the early settlers of America. (See Burlington).

"Newtown (Massachusetts) begat Hartford, Hartford begat Farmington and Farmington begat Bristol."—Peck.

BROOKFIELD: A deed from the Pootatuck Indians, signed by Pocono, Sachem, from whom the locality took its early name, granted a tract of land lying on both sides of the Housatonic—7 miles long and 3 miles wide on each side of the river—to aspirants from Stratford, under date of April 25, 1671. The town was probably settled about 1700. In 1754 it was organized as Newberry Parish from the towns of Danbury, (which gave $3\frac{3}{4}$ square miles for its southern part), New Milford (which gave her own southwestern part, South Farms), and Newtown (which gave 6 square miles, West Farms, or the Whisconier).

Pocono may have a connection with Poquonnock, cleared land. The name is descriptive.

BROOKLYN: In 1686, Captain John Blackwell, Jr. of Boston "a violent commonwealth's man" purchased of Major James Fitch of Norwich a tract of land. Blackwell had come to New England in 1684, commissioned by some of the English and Irish dissenters who were proposing to remove here, and in 1685 the Massachusetts Court granted him on their behalf a tract of land eight miles square "if laid out in the Nipmuck country." On July 8, 1686, a patent was granted Fitch, Blackwell and others in the Wabbaquasset country. (See Woodstock, Ashford).

Blackwell's proportion of the purchase, about 5000 acres, was laid out in a separate tract and a patent issued to him for a distinct township on October 19, 1687. He named it Mortlake in memory of the village in Surrey County near the Thames River, a few miles from London, the residence in England of General Lambert and a favorite resort of Cromwell's followers. The tract comprised the southwest part of the present town of Pomfret and the northern part of Brooklyn. It does not appear that the Captain made any settlements on his purchase, and in 1713 his son of the same name, of London, conveyed the whole tract to Johnathan Belcher, Esq. of Boston who laid out within it his manors of Kingswood and Wiltshire.

The boundaries of a parish "called and known by the name of Abbington" were laid by the General Court of May 1749, and town privileges were granted in May of the same year. The town boundaries were laid by Act of May 1751, and the Court of October 1752 resolved "that for the future said parish shall be called and known by the name of Brookline." The name may stem from the Quinebaug, long pond, that forms its eastern line, but the spelling was undoubtedly influenced by that of the Dutch Brooklyn, little brook, incorporated 1646 by New Amsterdam, originally Breukelen, from the town in the Netherlands.

BURLINGTON: Deriv.: uncertain. First settled between 1740 and 1745 as that part of Farmington (with Bristol) known as the West Woods or Great Forest, this section was incorporated in 1774 as the Society of West Britain. In May 1785, this Society sent in to the General Assembly a petition for joint incorporation as a town with the Society of New Cambridge (Bristol) which was granted. In May 1805, the General Assembly divided the town, and renamed it, the southern section retaining the name Bristol and the northern being given its present name probably from Bridlington, pronounced and often spelled "Burlington" in Yorkshire, England. (See Plainville).

CANAAN: Deriv.: Hebrew: low land, land of milk and honey. Exodus 3, 8: "And I am come down to . . . bring them up . . . unto a good land and a large, unto a land flowing with milk and honey, unto the place of the Canaanites." The General Court of October 1737 enacted that all the townships in the Western Lands hastily laid claim to by the Connecticut Colony in fear of their seizure by Governor Andros, (See Barkhamsted) be disposed of and settled. Named only as "the northwest town" the land now comprising Canaan was ordered sold "at the Court House in New London on the first Tuesday of January next [1738] at one of the clock afternoon . . . the same be set up [bid in by the Colony] at sixty pounds per right." The auction was held, settlers flocked in the same year, and the town was named and incorporated in May of that year with the others similarly sold.

Its name, while not selected by the people of the town, was undoubtedly chosen for the Biblical association. (See North Cannan, Goshen, Norfolk, Cornwall, Kent, Salisbury, Sharon, Colebrook).

CANTERBURY: Deriv.: The burg: fort or town of the people of Kent, Kent men's burgh or stronghold. Also: duro-fort, the swamp by the fort. Possibly settled as early as 1690, but in 1697 a settlement was made on "a neck of land" granted to Major James Fitch, Jr. and family of Norwich, by Owaneco, son of Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans. This was within a curve of the Quinebaug, below the river island of Peagscumsuck, and this name adhered to the vicinity for a long time, although Major Fitch named his plantation Kent. Canterbury, from Canterbury, in Kent County, England, therefor, was a logical choice when the General Assembly of October 14, 1703 laid out a dividing line between that town and Plainfield and granted that "the inhabitants on the west side of the river shall have the privileges of a township, and that the name of the town shall be Canterbury, and their brand for horses shall be this figure -C." (See Plainfield).

Peagscumsuck: Indian: a great brook.

CANTON: First settled on Chestnut (now East) Hill in 1737 in what was then West Simsbury, the General Assembly constituted this a parish "by the name of West Symsbury" in May 1750. It was incorporated as an independent town in 1806, formed from the west section of Simsbury and the eastern part of New Hartford.

The present name derives possibly from Canton, China, or, what is more probable, from the influence of one of its residents, a Mr. Ephriam Mills (1782-1863) who was greatly interested in the Swiss people and liked to refer to the parts of his town in their manner, as cantons. There was (the) North Canton, South Canton, Center Canton (Canton Center) and Canton Street.

CHAPLIN: In 1756, Benjamin Chaplin from southwest Pomfret bought a large tract of land here, opened a clearing on the Natchaug River, laid it out into farms, built himself a mansion and ruled as lord of the manor. At his death in 1795 he left a bequest, the interest of which was to be used for the support of a minister if a Society be formed there before January 1, 1812. Chaplin Society, named for its founder, was incorporated in 1809, and when a town was recognized in May 1822 from parts of Mansfield and Hampton with a little from Windham, the parish name was retained.

Names of districts hereabouts in early times were Bare Hill, to the east, and Dublin, from a number of Irish residents, to the southwest. About a mile south of the Center on the Natchaug River was Kennedy's Corners, now South Chaplin. Over to the west was Badlam Four Corners, with Chewink Plain to the southeast.

CHESHIRE: Deriv.: from the Latin castra, a city or walled town, generally one that had been a Roman station. This land lies on a part of that section purchased by John Davenport and other gentlemen of the New Haven Colony in 1638, and constituted the western part of the locality settled as New Haven Village about 1669. (See Wallingford, Meriden). Upon petition of the West Society in Wallingford the General Assembly constituted it a parish "to be called....New Cheshire" in May 1724. A piece of land lying "between the original bounds of the towns of Farmington and said Wallingford" was annexed to this in the same year, and parish and locality came to be called and referred to in the records as Cheshire, from the county of Cheshire in England. It was incorporated as a town independent of Wallingford in 1780.

CHESTER: Deriv.: See Cheshire, with which it was interchangeable. Settled about 1690, this was the Pattaquonk quarter of Saybrook. A committee was appointed by the General Court of May 1739 to "repair to said parish....and make report" of its qualifications for ecclesiastical privileges in October next. At that time a parish "by the name of Chester" was set off and bounded. It was incorporated as a town from Saybrook in 1836. The name is from Chester, capital city of Cheshire County in England.

Pattaquonk: round place.

CLINTON: Deriv.: from the Danish klint, Old Norse kletter, a hill. Settled originally as the southern part of Killingworth, this is a part of the section called Hammonasset. At the General Assembly of May 14, 1663, "This Court doth determine that the land at Homonoscitt doth not of right belong unto the Towne of Seabroke." The same Session appointed a Committee to view the lands "and if they judg it be nott fitt for a plantation, and will not be very prejudiciall to Saybrook, then they are to lay it out." The Committee returned with a writing under their hands dated June 3, 1663, wherein they stated that the situation would make "a comfortable plantation for the entertainment of 30 families to subsist comfortably." The Session closed with the order "that the land at Homenoscitt be reserved for a plantation" and that the planting thereof be referred to October Court. Bounds "betwixt SeaBrook and Homonaset" were laid by Act of 1665, and an Act of October 1666 ordered that "ye towne of Homonoscit shal for ye future be named Kenilworth". In 1838 by Special Act of the General Assembly, Clinton was set off from Kenelworth as a separate town and given the present name. This may have been chosen to honor Governor deWitt Clinton of New York. Or—and the date of settlement and early associations would bear this out—it could have been selected by friends of Lord Brooke, for whom Saybrook is named, from an association with Clinton Abbey in England, which forms a triangle with Kenelworth and Warwick Castle, his home there. Saybrook, Killingworth and Clinton in Connecticut form a similar—and suggestive—geographical triangle. (See Killingworth, Saybrook, Old Saybrook).

COLCHESTER: Deriv.: Colne-Chester (See Deriv.: Chester): the Roman Camp on River Colne. The Old British name was Camulodunon. The General Court of March 1661/2 granted "Unto Jeremiah Adams [of Hartford] 300 Acrs of vpland and 40 Acrs of meadow. . . . where he kept cattle last winter, going to Monhegin." In October 1698, "vpon petition of divers of the inhabitants in the countie of Hartford" the Court granted "libertye for plantation at or neer the place called Jeremiah's [Jeremie's] Farme upon the rode to Newlondon beginning at the north bound of Twentie Mile River and. . . . southward to a river called Deep River." In 1699 the Court ruled "that the name of that plantation shall be called Colchester (after the port and most ancient town of England in the County of Essex) and belong to the countie of Newlondon." The town was incorporated in 1698, and was early called the plantation at Twenty-mile River.

The choice of appellation may be attributed to Fitz-John Winthrop, as it was the first town to be named after his accession to the chief magistracy. The English Colchester, the capital of Essex County, was the nearest town of any size to the Winthrop home at Groton. But Essex was a county from which many of the early settlers came. (See Hartford, Wethersfield, Windsor).

COLEBROOK: Deriv.: cool brook. One of the things that King James expected in Connecticut of his Colonial Governor, Sir Edmund Andros, in addition to the seizure of her Charter, was the acquisition for the Crown of any and all unoccupied lands. With this well in mind, the General Court of the Colony went into Special Session at Hartford, on January 26, 1686/7, and made over to the plantations of Hartford and Windsor all "those lands on the north of Woodbury and Mattatock [Waterbury] and on the west of Farmington and Simsbury to the Massachusetts line north, and to run west to Housatonock or Stratford River to make a plantation or villages thereon." This great territory, which embraces more than the whole of the present Litchfield County, was subsequently referred to as the Western Lands, and included, besides Colebrook, what is now Norfolk, Goshen, Canaan, Cornwall, Kent, Salisbury, Sharon, Torrington, Barkhamsted, Harwinton, Hartland, Winchester and New Hartford. Settlement did not begin in this district until 1765, when proprietors' rights were sold by Hartford under a joint agreement with Windsor. The town was named in 1732. There is an English Colebrook in Devonshire, another in the environs of London. Again, the landscape of the English and the Connecticut localities is similar, which may further have induced the choice of name. Colebrook was incorporated as a town in 1779. (See North Canaan, Torrington).

COLUMBIA: The land here was first conveyed by a deed under date of September 25, 1699 from Abimeleck, son of Attawanhood (Joshua), Sachem of the Western Nehantics, to Deacon Josiah Dewey and William Clarke, and doubly conveyed on May 2 of the following year by Owaneco, Sachem, son of Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans. (See Mansfield, Tolland, Hebron). Known as Lebanon Crank, possibly from the shape of its outlines on the map, the inhabitants of "us...inhabiting at a place called the crank and at Hop river" (See Simsbury) petitioned to the town of Lebanon for the privileges of an independent Society on February 28, 1715. And on April 26 of that year "at a Legall town Meting of.... Lebanon they then granted the petition of ye people at ye Crank either to be a society by themselves or a township according as the honoured Courte shall see cause to incorieg," and laid down a boundary according to the wishes of the petitioners. The General Court incorporated the Society at its May Session, when it was given the poetic name for the United States that was retained when Columbia became a town in May 1804.

CORNWALL: Deriv.: probably from Cornovii. The Old English Cornvealas means the Welsh people in Cornwall. This folk-name later became the name of the district.

One of the seven townships in the Western Lands on both sides of the Housatunnick river ordered disposed of and settled by Act of the General Court of 1737, this town was sold at auction in Fairfield on February 8, 1738. Settlement began in 1740, and town privileges were granted in May of that year, when the town was named. (See Barkhamsted, Colebrook, New Hartford, Litchfield). Cornwall is one of the six towns in Litchfield County to be named together in 1738 and annexed to Hartford County. The name is undoubtedly from Cornwall shire or county in southwestern England. (See the sister towns, Canaan, Salisbury, Norfolk, Goshen, Kent).

COVENTRY: Deriv.: Probably Cofa's tree; cofa a cave, den, or inner room.

The land here, known by the Indian name Wangumbaug, was part of the tract bequeathed by Attawanhood (Joshua) 3rd son of Uncas and Sachem of the Western Nehantics to "gentlemen in Hartford." In May 1706 the General Court appointed a committee to lay out a township here, and a settlement was begun in 1709. In October 1711, Wangumbaug was given town privileges and named for Coventry in Warwickshire in the mother country. (See Tolland).

Wangumbaug: bent or crooked pond.

CROMWELL: Deriv.: from Crunwelle, Crumwella: winding stream. The Old English, crumb, means crooked. Settled about 1650, this town was first known as Upper Middletown or Middletown Upper Houses. The General Court of May 1703 enacted "upon the request by a voat of the inhabitants....of Midltown.... all those persons that now are....dwellers....on the north side of the....riverett [Little (ferry) River] in the said towne of Midletown....shall be one intire societie & parish by and of themselves."

It was incorporated as a separate town in 1851. This may have been named to honor Oliver Cromwell, though there is no record of his having admirers there at this time. But in 1823, in the town, William Redfield built a Connecticut River steamer and named her the "Oliver Cromwell", perhaps from the person, but more probably from the Revolutionary privateer the "Oliver Cromwell", built earlier down the river at Essex, and well known to all the towns along the river whose lives centered in boats. As the name more than the person was so much in mind among the people of the town, it may be at least supposed that the town was named less directly from the person remembered in England than from an association with its own principal activity.

DANBURY: Deriv.: the burg: fortress or city of the people from the dene: valley. The General Assembly of May 1684 "appoynted . . . a committee for to order the planting of a Towne above Norwalke or Fayrefeild, and to receive in inhabitants to plant there; and what they, or any three of them, shall doe in the premises shall be good to all intents and purposes for the planting of Poquiage." In the same year eight families "trekked through Sugar Hollow and over Pandanarum" to settle there. On October 16, 1687 a petition was sent to the General Court asking that the plantation of Paquiage, then inhabited by 20 families, be constituted a town and be named Swam(p)field. This Court, however, named the new town at Paquiage, Danbury, and granted "that the bownds of the sayd towne . . . shall be 6 mile square, provided it doe not prejudice any former grant to any peticular person." There is one tradition that its earliest popular name, Beantown, came from the purchase of the land here from the Indians with a bag of beans. Reason for its later nickname, The Hat City, is obvious. Swampfield was descriptive and Paquiag is Indian, meaning open country. Danbury is named from Danbury (originally Dane-bury) in Essex, England. The second of the -bury towns. (See Waterbury.)

DARIEN: Settled as a part of Stamford about 1648 or earlier, application for parish privileges for this locality was sent to the General Court of May 1737. The committee reporting favorably, the Court of the following October granted the request, naming the Society Midlesex. In 1820 the parish was incorporated as a separate town and given its present name—one which may have descended from some early association with the capture by Colonial troops of Porto Bello in Darien in 1739. (See Vernon). In 1820 Colombia, of which Darien was a district, had just gained her independence and was consequently much in the news.

DERBY: Deriv.: der, deer abode, or were seen; by, homestead, or village, village with a deer park. In 1642, Captain John Wakeman of New Haven established a trading post at the junction of the Naugatuck and Housatonic Rivers, a section known as Paugaset. To the General Court at New Haven of October 19, 1655, Richard Baldwin reported that of those who had an interest at Paugaset, he had "spoken with all but two, and they have made their minds thus farr known...that they are verely willing and desierous...First, that they may stand upon theire own account in relation to ye jurisdiction, without beeing under any other plantation, Second; That they may have allowanc of the court to purchase convenient lands for ye accomodation of a small plantation there, and Third, That they may have libertie to chuse out from among themselves one that may be a help to them to cary on the affaires of the place." "Wch things", upon consideration of the Court were granted and Paugaset declared "to be under and a part of this jurisdiction" (New Haven's). In spite of this propitious beginning, town privileges were not granted until May 1675, when "The plantation of Pawgussuck is by this Court named Derby", for Derby, town and county in England. The Indian name, taken from the tribe that lived there, means a place in the river where the narrows open out. (See Shelton).

DURHAM: Deriv.: Dunholm or Durealme or Duram: home or island with a hill. Dun is Old English, holm Old Scandinavian. In May 1699, the General Assembly at Hartford "Upon petition of divers persons inhabitants of Guilford and Kenelworth [granted] liberty for a plantation at the place comonly called Cockinchaug", and boundaries were laid. The principal settlement was made by persons from Guilford and had been begun the year before. In May 1704, it was ordered that "the plantation at Cockinchaug shall be called Durham, and that the inhabitants there shall have this figure, ID for a brand for their horskind." The town was named for Durham, town and county in northern England, the original home of a few of the settlers of America who came before 1650 including the Watts family. It was incorporated in 1708. The Indian name, Coginchaug, means long swamp. It was first applied to the land here by the English.

EASTFORD: This was a part of the Wabbaquasset Country (See Ashford) and the first land laid out was a tract 4 miles square, now the south part of the town. This was made over to Simeon Stodd[a]rd 3rd, of Boston in the Massachusetts Colony, in satisfaction of a judgement of Court in 1695, and became known as the Stoddard Tract. As the land was a part of that already granted by Owaneco to Major Fitch of Norwich (See Canterbury), the General Court of Connecticut in May 1706 tried to settle the rival claims by granting out a township there. In April 1710, John Perry of Marlborough, Massachusetts, bought 350 acres of land "north of Stoddard land, on both sides Still River" and settled there, beginning the establishment as a unit of the eastern part of the plantation of New Scituate. In October 1777, the General Assembly at Hartford granted this settlement the privileges of a Society, giving it the name Eastford, probably for its location in the eastern part of Ashford. The -ford was a retention of a part of the name of the mother town, a not uncommon procedure. The parish name was retained when the section became a town in May 1847.

EAST GRANBY: Deriv.: See Granby. Settled about 1710 as a part of Massacoe (See Simsbury), petition for parish privileges from settlers in this section was presented to the General Assembly of May 1736, and a committee was requested "to repair to Symsbury upon the cost of the memorialists and to...make their report, how they find the true state of the matters." At the Court of the following October it was enacted "That there be a society in the northeast corner of Symsbury, at the place called Turkey Hills." Turkey Hills Parish, or the Northeast Society of Simsbury, was enlarged in 1737 by the addition of a tier of lots taken from the northwest corner of Windsor. It was incorporated as the town of East Granby on June 2, 1858, with practically the same boundaries as those laid down for the original Society.

Massacoe is Indian, meaning the great brook's mouth.

EAST HADDAM: Deriv.: See Haddam. The first settlement here was begun at Creek Row about the year 1670, in a part of the country the Indians called Machimoodus. In 1697, a petition was sent from this section to the General Assembly for a committee "to view the lands on both sides the river, and to consider whether there be a sufficient quantity of land on each side for accomodation of inhabitants, whereby each side may be capable of maintaining a minister and being a distinct society." The reply, returned by the Court of the following May was not altogether satisfactory to the petitioners: "the comittee...cannot find that the inhabitants of Haddum are able...as yet, but doe advise the petitioners to indeavour a loving and christian-like unitye with their brethren...ypon such termes as may be for their mutuall comfort." But in October 1700 the petition was renewed and granted, and in May 1734, East Haddam was set off from Haddam and incorporated as an independent town retaining a part of the name of the mother town. Machimoodus: place where the noises are.

EAST HAMPTON Eastham-town: Deriv.: Old English Ham-tun; Ham or Homm: a meadow (especially a flat low-lying meadow) on a stream; also, an enclosed plot, a pasture or meadow surrounded by a ditch. Tun is town. In 1673, the General Court extended the original bounds of Middletown on the east side of the river "six miles up". This included what is now East Hampton and was called The Three Mile Division. Settlement here began about 1710. In October 1774 a petition was sent to the General Court for the privileges of an independent Society, stating some of the petitioners lived ten miles distant from the place of worship and "the Rhoads we are to travel in are very Rough and Bad to Travel in." Two years later, the privileges were granted, and the name East Hampton given, probably because some of the settlers were from Eastham, in Barnstable County, Massachusetts. There had been "regular preaching" there since 1742. In 1767 this part of Middletown east of the river was incorporated as an independent town and named Chatham, from Chatham, in Kent shire, England. On May 4, 1915, the name of the original parish was reverted to. Pocotopaug, the Indian name for the lake, means divided pond. (See Middletown, Portland).

EAST HARTFORD: Deriv.: See Hartford. Incorporated as a town in October, 1783. This was the home of Wahginnacut, Sachem of the Podunk Indians, who travelled to Boston and Plymouth in 1631 to invite the white men to settle in the rich valley of his Broad River, hoping their presence would give him and his tribe protection from his hereditary enemies, the Pequots, Mohawks and Narragansetts. Deeds from the Indians of all the land around Hartford have been preserved except for the portion now covered by East Hartford, but this was known as the three-mile tract, and its history with that of the five miles purchase (Manchester) is included with that of Hartford until 1783. Then those two sections were set off and incorporated as a single town, named East Hartford. The original boundary of the town of Hartford east of the river on the south was "att the mouth of Pewterpott Brooke att the lower side of Hoccano [Hoccanum], and there to run due east into the Country three miles." On the north at "the Riverett's mouth (by the Indians called Podanke) that falls into the saide greate River of Conectecott, and there the said Hartford is to runn due east into the Country." The region north of the Hockanum river was generally called by Indian and white settlers Podunk, though in 1657 the Podunk tribe abandoned their lands, either from fear of Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans, or of their new neighbors. Some effort on the part of the white men to bring them back is shown by an order of that year "that Uncas bee required to p^rmit the Podunk Indians to return to their dwellings & there abide in peace and safety wthout molestation from him or his, & that the said Indians be invited so to do by the Governor of Conecticott."

Hoccanum means hook-shaped. The name was applied to a tract of land and the stream which bounds it in East Hartford, but a change in the bed of the Connecticut has taken away the "hook". Podunk was Potunck, also Potaecke. It applied to the stream emptying into the Connecticut and the land abounding it, like Hoccanum, reaching over East and South Windsor as well as East Hartford. Its derivation is uncertain.

EAST HAVEN: Deriv.: See New Haven. A part of the present town was included in the first and second tracts of land purchased in 1638 from the Indian Sachem Momaugin and his sister Shuampishuh, a Squaw Sachem or Indian queen, and Montowese, son of the great Sachem Sowheag at Mattabeseck (Middletown). On August 5, 1644, Thomas Gregson of New Haven received a grant of 133 acres at Solitary (Morris) Cove. For the first fifty years the main settlement was at the southern end of the Great Pond, and an iron works was established there through the influence of Governor Winthrop and others at the foot of Lake Saltonstall in 1657. That it was locally referred to as Iron Works Village is shown in the Records of the Court for May 28, 1662, when "John Cooper p(ro)pounded. . . . that the wine & liquors drawne at jron workes might be custome free." "The liberties and conveniency of a village" were granted by the Court of May 1667. The use of the word village is unusual, and was probably substituted for town or plantation because the dwellings clustered around the iron works differed conspicuously from the usual scattered farmhouses. (See Litchfield). The Court at Hartford of May 1680, considering "the . . . difficulties they have mett withall . . . and upon hopes that they may be capeable to set up and mayntaine the worship of God in that place as a perticular society of themselves doe grant them free liberty so to embody." East Haven was incorporated as a town distinct from New Haven in May 1785.

EAST LYME: Deriv.: See Lyme. After King Philip's war some of Captain John Mason's men were given grants of land in appreciation of their services. Five of these were granted one hundred acres each at Pequot (New London). But the locality already "being taken up by Pequett" the Court of May 15, 1651, decided to lay out to these veterans land in what is now roughly the southern part of East Lyme. John Clarke and Thomas Birchard of Saybrook were appointed to "goe to Pequett and view the said percell of land there given to the said souldgers and taken up by Pequett, and then goe to Nianticut and lay out there unto the said souldgers such and so m(uch) land as may bee fully equiolent to theire former graunt." Settlement went forward in that part of Lyme known as the southeast part, or Niantick Quarter, organized and named in 1667. A Society was authorized here in October 1719, and in 1839 East Lyme was incorporated as an independent town. Nianticut (May-anyquit) denotes a point of land on a tidal river.

EASTON: Settled about 1757 by people from Fairfield, the early farms here constituted at once the northern part of Fairfield and the eastern part of Weston. Comfort Starr, Richard Fairman and Joseph Platt, Es qrs were appointed a committee by the General Assembly of May 1762, in answer to the request for ecclesiastical privileges sent in by inhabitants from the parishes of Greenfield, Stratfield and North Stratford. The privileges of a Society were granted upon favorable report of the committee to the Court of the following October. Boundaries for the parish were also laid down by the committee, a part of which included what was to become the town of Weston. It was named North Fairfield Parish and set off from Weston as the town of Easton in 1845. The name is from its geographical relation to Weston.

EAST WINDSOR: Deriv.: See Windsor. This town was originally included within the boundaries of ancient Windsor. The Windsor Indians had their principal seat at Poquonnock, a place on the Farmington River five or six miles above its junction with the Connecticut. Although the Windsor and River Indians "professed themselves neuter in Philip's War, yet numbers of their young men stole away to the warpath and never returned." Perhaps this was why the eastern bank of the Connecticut was used only as a summer pasturage by families from Windsor until the termination of the war made it safe for permanent settlement. In May 1696, the Court granted "free liberty in an orderly way....for....inhabitants....to embody themselves into church estate." For the 15 years preceding, they had crossed the river in boats, in order to attend worship on the west side. In 1768, East Windsor was named by the General Court and separated from the mother town, "their common stock, money and poor....divided".

Poquonnock: See Bridgeport.

ELLINGTON: Deriv.: the town of Ella's people.

Settled, with East Windsor, as a part of ancient Windsor, and referred to in the early records as "the east part of the township of Windsor on the east side of the great river, commonly called Goshen," besides Windsor Goshen (to distinguish it from Goshen in Litchfield County) it was also called the Great Marsh. The privileges of an ecclesiastical Society were granted in October 1736, bounds were officially laid and the Society named Ellington Parish. The center of the town was known as Meeting House Hill. The original parish included the lands generally known as East Windsor, which by 1768 had four distinct Societies. Incorporation as a town was granted on the 2nd Thursday of May 1786, retaining the parish name. There are Ellingtons in three English shires, Yorks, Hants and Northumberland. If it was named directly from a place in England, it would probably be one of the first two as very few of the early settlers came from Northumberland.

ENFIELD: Old English, ened: duck; feld: open country. In 1642 the boundary line between the colonies had been run by order of the General Court of Massachusetts. Through some error, the surveyors had reached the Connecticut river several miles too far south, so that all the territory that is now Enfield belonged to Massachusetts. The locality here was known as Freshwater as early as 1648. At a town meeting in Springfield on August 14, 1679, a committee was appointed to manage the concerns of a proposed plantation "at the Falls & at Freshwater," "to order and act all matters so that the place may become a town of itself", and this form of government endured until Andros was made Royal Governor of New England in 1687. In May 1683, the committee sent a petition to the General Court at Boston, asking that they be made a town, and the boundary set enlarging considerably upon the original tract. This was granted, and a deed secured from the Indian owner Totaps (Nottatuck) on March 16, 1688.

Presently friction began to develop between the spreading settlement and the adjacent Connecticut Colony. Complaint was made to the Court at Hartford by "inhabitants of our town of Windzor that...inhabitants of Southfield [Suffield] and Enfield...intrench above two miles upon lands belonging to this Colonie....and hath by them for many years been quietly possessed of the same." After considerable investigation, a new line was run between the colonies in 1713, and Woodstock, Enfield, Suffield, and Somers all found themselves still, considerably to their displeasure and quite without their consent, a part of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. The agreement between the colonies had been that the town which had been settled by any one government should abide by its jurisdiction. A long controversy ensued, with innumerable petitions to both Courts. Finally, at a town meeting held in Enfield on April 6, 1747 it was "Voated to appoint Capt. Sam^l Dwight a Com^{tee} for this town....to Joyn with ye Comtees....of Woodstock, Suffield and Somers to make application to ye Great & General Court of ye Province of ys massachusetts Bay & to ye General Assembly of Conneticut....to obtain our right in being Released from ye sd. province & set off & allowed to belong to ye sed Collony of Connecticut as by Law & Juctice we ought to be." In May 1749, Enfield, Suffield and Woodstock were admitted to Connecticut Colony, and with Somers, were constituted ecclesiastical Societies in May 1753.

The name may have come from Enfield in Middlesex, England, or the settlers may have thought of it as the "end-field", (See Suffield)—as it was often spelled—of the Province of Massachusetts Bay.

ESSEX: Deriv.: the east Saxons. After the abandonment of the original idea of the settlement at Saybrook, the territory appears to have been sold to a company of settlers who, under the jurisdiction of Connecticut Colony, founded a settlement at Saybrook Point and laid out the land there. When the settlement outgrew Saybrook Point, and the inhabitants were "disabled as to a comfortable sustinence...[they] did chuse out a committee" which surveyed "the outlands, to the utmost extent of our land then granted to us". These lands were then arbitrarily divided (See Old Saybrook) into three sections, or quarters, and named the Oyster River Quarter (Westbrook), the Eight Miles Meadow or Potopauge (Essex) quarter and the East Side of the River quarter. At a town meeting in Old Saybrook on January 4, 1648, Oyster River Quarter and Potopauge Quarter were sold in lots to ten men for £2000. The proprietors of these two quarters held occasional separate meetings for the transaction of their business, and on December 12, 1670, called a joint meeting to consult in regard to their dividing line; since "a people hath been planted at Homonasak (Clinton) which it is feared will entrench upon the Quarter of Oyster River." Potopaug therefor "by a loving compliance" agreed to a new division, and "Quarter meetings" were held thereafter in different parts of the settlement, generally convening at nine or ten o'clock in the forenoon. Matters like the opening and closing of highways came under their supervision and also any further division of lands. After about two hundred years, this unusual meeting of the sections of a town was gradually discontinued. Potopaug was a part of Old Saybrook when the town was divided, Saybrook from Old Saybrook, by the General Assembly of 1852. Two years later, Old Saybrook was divided again, the northern part set off as a separate town given the name of Essex,—indirectly from the shire in England from which a large number of the earliest settlers came—(See Colchester) and more directly from Essex County in Massachusetts, a locality from which many persons removed to Connecticut.

FAIRFIELD: Deriv.: beautiful feld: field; also hog field. In 1639, two years after Roger Ludlow had marked this locality as favorable for settlement (See Bridgeport), having secured a commission to begin a plantation at adjoining Pequonnock, he returned, with a party of settlers from Windsor, and occupied instead "the fair fields of Uncoway." This occasioned some question, as Pequonnock was not Uncoway, but was confirmed by the General Court on January 16, 1639, when "Mr. Governor...related that himselfe with Mr. Wells...went thither and took a view of what had been done by Mr. Ludlow there...and...desired their confirmation by the Court." The Court of May 1667 granted "the Town of Fayrefeild liberty to runn their bownds northwards soe farr as Stratford bownds goes, which is 12 miles." In May 1668 it appointed a committee "to assist in the layeing out of bownds between Norwalke and Fayrfeild". Finally, in May 1685, the Court granted to Fairfield a patent of all those lands "having been by purchase or otherwise lawfully obtained of the Indian natives", and defined these lands "according to the commission granted to us by His Majesty in our charter", making Fairfield one of the very early towns to be included within the jurisdiction of the Colony of Connecticut. The Indian name was Unquowa (Ongkoué), beyond Pequonnock River, and the white settlers retained that name after they bought the land in 1639, but it had given way to Fairfield even before the town's inclusion among those of the Colony. There is a Fairfield in Derbyshire, England; also a hamlet so-named in Lancashire. A number of the other towns and parishes in this locality chose their names with some reference to the mother town. (See Weston, Stratford, Bridgeport, New Fairfield.)

FARMINGTON: Deriv.: Tormertora, mere where thorns grow. In January 1639/40, the General Court appointed a committee "to view those parts by Vnxus Sepus...suitable...for inlargement of accommadacon." On December 1, 1645 it was "Ordered, that the Plantation cauled Tunxis shalbe cauled Farmington," for—it is reasonable to suppose—the village of Farmington in Gloucestershire on a branch of the river Windrush. A number of early settlers from Gloucestershire were in America before 1650. The bounds were laid and included the later towns of Southington, Berlin, Bristol, Burlington and Avon. The first treaty between the proprietors and the two Indian chiefs, Pethus and Ahamo, was signed in 1650. The General Court of October 1705, granted that the inhabitants here "become a ministeriall societie", (See Plainville) at the same time incorporating a second society "at the place comonly called the Great Swamp [See Berlin]. . . . this Assembly grants their petition so farre as the town of Farmington have granted." The Indian name Tunxis was given to a place in the Sepus (Little) River, where it bends or turns, the place-name carrying over to the name of the tribe.

FRANKLIN: Deriv.: Frank (free) ling. Old English: freeman land-owner. In 1659, the General Court at Hartford granted the petition of inhabitants "of Seabrooke. . . . and. . . . doe declare yt they approve. . . . what is desired. . . . respecting Mohegin [Upper Norwich], prvided yt within ye space of three yeares they doe effect a Plantation in ye place propounded." In 1663, lands here were parcelled out among the occupants of the Town Plot in Norwich, and the little settlement went forward as a part of the "nine miles square" of that town. On September 19, 1716, the people of Norwich agreed in Town Meeting "that the West Farmers be allowed to be a society by themselves, destinct from ye Town Plot." The petition was referred to the General Assembly of that year: As "it is scarce possible for us to attend in Norwich, being several of us 7 or 8 [miles] & but 2 or 3 within 4 miles of the place of publick worship." The petition was readily granted, West Farms being the second Society organized in the nine miles square. It was so designated until the division of the town in 1789, when it was incorporated as a town of itself by the General Assembly and named in honor of Benjamin Franklin. It was also called, Place of the Seven Hills, which were Portipaug, Hearthstone, Meeting House, Center or Middle, (now Great), Misery, Blue, and Little Lebanon. The Indian name for this locality was Pautipaug: miry land.

GLASTONBURY: Deriv.: The original name was possibly something like Glastonia, a derivative of the Old Celt Glasto: place where the wood grew. Settled as a part of Wethersfield in 1650, on part of the land purchased from Sowheag, Sachem of the Wangunks, by a deed of May 18, 1667, when "Wethersfeild men gave so much unto Sowheag as was to his satisfaction for all their plantations lyeing on both sides the great River. . . . three miles deep from the River eastward." In May 1690, the General Court at Hartford provided that the "inhabitants of the towne of Wethersfeild on the east side of Conecticot Riuer may have liberty. . . . to be a township"—to which was added the admonition; "but advise them to be cautious how they improve it." The town was known by the Indian name Nabuck, until June 1692, when "This Court names the towne at Nabuck over against Weathers-feild, Glassenbury". The present name is from Glastonbury in Somersetshire, the home of early settlers of New England. The Indian name a upauk means flooded land.

GOSHEN: Deriv.: Hebrew: a land of special fertility and protection. Genesis 47, 6. "The land of Egypt is before thee; in the best of the land make they father and thy brethren to dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell." Genesis 45, 10; 47, 27; Exodus 8, 22; 9, 26. This was a part of the Western Lands (See Colebrook, Kent, Salisbury, Barkhamsted) made over to Hartford and Windsor. "The design of this conveyance" says Benjamin Trumbull, "was that these towns should hold the land thus granted for the Governor and Company until those times of danger and trouble should be passed, but not as their property." Ownership by the Colony was further confirmed by the Court of May 1719, when it provided "that the whole of said . . . land shall lie for the further dispose of this Assembly; and all surveyors and persons . . . are hereby forbidden to bound or lay out any of said land without the special order of this Assembly." Nevertheless, the Court of 1722 found that "several persons . . . are going about to dispose of and lay out the lands which lie north and east and west of Litchfield", and they appointed a committee to investigate. And when in May 1723, it was found that "whereas some persons . . . have been so hardy as to adventure, without the leave of this Assembly, presumptuously and in defiance of the said Act, to lay out a township" (Goshen) prosecutions were ordered. The disagreement ran along until October 1737, when an Act ordering the sale and settlement "of all the Townships in the Western Lands" was passed, containing this reference to Goshen: "That the town joyning to Litchfield north line and eastwardly on Torrington, be set up and sold at the court house at New Haven, . . . on the first Tuesday of December next." This was done, and the Court of May 1738 enacted that "the township sold at New Haven . . . is hereby named . . . Goshen", thus over-riding the choice of the town which was originally known as New Bantam. Goshen was organized at the house of Deacon John Buel in West-street, Litchfield on the 27th and 28th of September, of the same year.

GRANBY: Deriv.: From the Old English Granebi, Grani's by, dwelling, home, hamlet or town. This town was laid out on a part of the land owned by John Griffen of Windsor, who had built a lodge at the Falls in 1664. In October 1735, a committee was appointed by the General Assembly to "repair to . . . Symsbury and hear the several parties there in reference to their being made into distinct ecclesiastical societies & to divide said town into . . . societies." In October 1736, one of these was authorized "At the northwest corner of Symsbury, at the place called Salmon Brook". In 1786, this was incorporated from Simsbury as an independent town, 26,000 acres being taken from Simsbury. The name is probably from Granby in Nottinghamshire, a county from which there was a considerable migration to New England before 1650. East Granby was later set off from Granby.

GREENWICH: Deriv.: Green wic: a green village, hamlet or town. The first purchase from the Indians of land here was made by Captain Daniel Patrick, "a fighting Englishman from Massachusetts" and Robert Feaks, on July 16, 1640. This included "ye severall lands betwene Asamuck river and Potomuck, which Potomuck is a little river which divideth ye bounds betwene Capt. Turner's Purchase and this, except ye neck by ye Indians called Monakewego, by us Elizabeth neck, which neck is ye peticaler perchase of Elizabeth Feaks, ye sd. Robt. Feaks, his wife. . . . And theye to enjoy. . . . ye severall naturall adjuncts of all ye forementioned places, neighther shall ye indians fish within a mile of anney english. . . . nor invite any other indians to sett down in ye forementioned lands; in consideration of which. . . . ye. . . . purchasers are to give. . . . 25 coats." The purchase was made ostensibly under the auspices of the New Haven Colony, but in 1642, "the Captain and Elizabeth Feaks, duly authorized by her husband. . . ., now sick", partly because of disagreement with "the Lord States General" and partly because of "these treacherous and villainous Indians of whom we have seen so many sorrowful examples enough" signed another deed, in which they "be take ourselves under the protection of. . . [the] Governor General of New Netherlands", and Greenwich became a manor, with Patrick and Feaks as patroons. This, however was terminated on October 6, 1656, when the inhabitants here sent in a paper to the General Court at New Haven, stating that they did "freely yeild ourselves. . . . to the government of Newhaven", and the Court ruled that "they are to fall in with Stamford, and be accounted a part thereof." Settlement did not flourish, due to guerilla warfare and other troubles until about 1660. (See Stamford).

The Court of May 11, 1665 declared "that Greenwich shalbe a Township intire of itself, provided they procure and mainteine an orthodox minister." The patent was confirmed and issued in 1697. In 1854 Greenwich was made a borough and consolidated with the town in 1932.

Horse Neck was the English name for the section at Field Point west of Greenwich Harbor, now the borough of Greenwich, used by the settlers as a pasture for horses. Petukquipaug (round pond), gave a name to part of the township. The Dutch called it Petuck-quapaen. The name of the section to the west of this, Miossehassaky, may be from the Narragansett Moshassuck: marshy land. The present name is probably from the Greenwich in England near London, as Robert Feaks came from the parish of St. Nicholas Acon in London.

GRISWOLD: This settlement was on land held by the Mohegan Indians and granted to the Colony of Connecticut under the Charter of 1662. In 1640 the Colony had obtained title from Uncas, Sachem, of all the lands in Connecticut except their planting grounds, a matter of such subsequent dispute that whenever a farm in the Mohegan country was granted by the Court, it was found wise and safe to obtain a grant also from the Mohegan chief. The actual sum received by the Indians for land within the limits of Griswold was not far from £35 sterling, in addition to five yards of cloth and a few pairs of stockings. The village of Jewett (or Jewett's City) was founded April 9, 1771, by Eleazer Jewet from whose "persevering industry and active benevolence it has derived its present importance; its name will perpetuate his memory". (Quotation from the tombstone of Mr. Eleazer Jewett (1730-1817)). The General Assembly of October 1716 divided the town of Preston into two ecclesiastical Societies, of which the northern, later to become Griswold, was called the North Society. In October 1815, Griswold was incorporated from Preston as a separate town, and named for the Honorable Matthew Griswold, seventeenth Governor of Connecticut. The present boundaries cover a good deal of what was known by the Indian name of Pachaug: possibly a derivative of pachau-auke: a turning-place, or from poochoag: a recess or corner.

GROTON: Deriv.: Old English groton: sandy stream. The General Court of May 17, 1649 "Graunted, that the bounds of the plantation of Pequett [New London] shall be foure myles on each side the River". This section, known as the East Side, was first occupied as a part of that settlement by Johnathan Brewster, eldest son of Elder William Brewster of the Plymouth Colony. Here he set up "a trading howse", at Brewster's Neck lying on the Thames north of the present town of Groton. Ecclesiastical privileges were granted in October 1703, "they . . . to call M^r Ephraim Woodbridge", as their minister. It was not usual for the Court to name the minister. In May 1705, when Fitz-John Winthrop was still governor the Court provided that the New London settlement "be divided into two townships. . . the lands on the east side of the said river to be a distinct township to be called by the name of Groton," out of respect for the Suffolk County seat of the Winthrop family. The Indian name, Poquannoc, denotes cleared land.

GUILFORD: Deriv.: Old English, probably meaning: ford where the golden flowers grew. This town has the distinction of having been deeded to the white men by a "sunk squaw" or female chief for a quantity of feminine treasure probably unequalled in any similar transaction in the history of Connecticut. This was Shaumpishuh, Squaw Sachem of the Quinapiacs who, on September 29, 1639, signed an agreement with Mr. Henry Whitfield and 5 other English planters, at Mr. Robert Newman's barn in Quinapiac (New Haven) to sell all the land between Kuttawoo (East River) and Oiockcommock (Stony Creek); the "sayd Sachem Squaw, havinge received 12 coates, 12 fathom of Wompom, 12 [looking-] glasses, 12 payer of shoes, 12 Hatchetts, 12 paire of stockings, 12 Hooes, 4 kittles, 12 knives, 12 hatts, 12 poringers, 12 spoons and 2 English coates, professeth herselfe fully payed and satisfied."

Record of the naming of this town by the General Court at New Haven states briefly, "Menunkatuck named Guilforde", on July 6, 1643. The name is from Guil(d)ford, the capital of the county of Surrey, in England, the home of John Scranton who came to Guilford, Connecticut by way of the Boston and New Haven Colonies. The town was admitted to the Colony of Connecticut by the Court at Hartford on October 8, 1662 (after the Royal Charter had enlarged the original borders of the Colony to include the settlements of and around New Haven). The Act concludes, possibly as an inducement to neighboring towns not as anxious to be a part of Connecticut, that the Court "shalbe ready to affoord what protection is necessary. And this Court doth advise the said persons to carry peaceably and religiously in their places towards the rest of ye Inhabitants" doubtless of New Haven "that yet have not submitted in like manner." "And also to pay their iust dues unto ye Minister of their Towne."

Menunketuck, or Menhaden Country; the first syllables are probably a corruption of the Indian word for the white or bony-fish taken in great abundance along these shores, and highly valued by the Indians for mauling their corn-land.

HADDAM: Deriv.: Haeda's (pers.) ham. town. Early spelled, Hadham. To the General Court of October 4, 1660, "Severall members of this Collony" requesting the "settling a Plantation at Thirty Mile Island", a committee was appointed not only to "view the place", but to "dispose of it as may be most sutable for to attaine the end and purpose abovesaid....What right appeares that ye Indians have there it is left to ye Committee....who ordered ye purchase Thereof." The Indian deed for the land was signed in behalf of the Colony by this committee on May 1662, and the two Indian chiefs and the two Indian queens of the locality received thirty coats, or about one hundred dollars. They also retained "free liberty to hunt and fish at our pleasure; so we abuse not nor wrong the English in their cattle or corn." The bounds were laid by the Court of October 8, 1668 "according to the neighborly proposition of our friends of Saybrook" and "the plantation.... shall for the future be called Haddum." The Court of May 1695 "doe countenanc and encourage the good people of Haddum to imbody themselves in church estate." The town belonged to Hartford County until May 1785, when Middlesex County was organized. The northern part of Haddam Society was called Higganomos (now Higganum), and the western Cockaponset, which, John Warner Barber observes with apparent disapproval, "The English have changed to Punset." The original name, tomheg, nomsk-ul means at the axe, or tomahawk rock, and Higganomos designates the rock itself, one from which the river Indians obtained stones for making tomahawks. The present name is probably taken from the village of Little Haddam in Hertfordshire, a county from which many early settlers came.

HAMDEN: Settled on the northern part of land purchased in 1638 from the Indians by the Reverend John Davenport and Theophilus Eaton for the Colony of New Haven, this was known as the Wilderness. Parish privileges were permitted by Act of October 1757, and the Society named Mount Carmel. (See North Haven). Formerly, the local name for the mountain range had been Blue Hills, "But of late years" observes Mr. George Sherwood Dickerman, "the name which the General Assembly gave to an ecclesiastical society has become fastened on the mountain . . . so . . . the natural order is reversed; the parish did not get its designation from the mountain, but the mountain from the parish." When the town was incorporated in 1786, however, it was named for John Hampden, the English patriot." Carmel: Deriv.: Hebrew: Isaiah 25, 2. (See Sharon).

HAMPTON: Deriv.: ham-tun, perhaps valley with a village. To the General Assembly of October 1710, Major James Fitch of Canterbury moved for an order to establish a boundary between his town and Windham, and this was completed in 1713. Two years later, the inhabitants in this section petitioned Windham for permission to form an ecclesiastical Society, and that town appointed a committee "to consider the proposals of our northeast neighbors . . . and to lay a skeem for bounds of a parish." Consent was granted by the town in December 1716, and confirmed by the General Court of that year. This was locally known as Windham Village, or Canada (Canady) Parish, but there is no documentary record, and the name is probably a corruption of Kennedy. David "Canada", of Salem, Massachusetts was the first settler (about 1706), and of him little is known but the fact of his purchase and settlement. In 1786, the parish was made a town, incorporated from Brooklyn, Canterbury, Mansfield, Pomfret and Windham, and named from Hampton in Middlesex, England, seat of the old royal palace of Hampton Court. The Indian name Appaquag, applied to the Little River, originally meant the place where flags grew. (See Ashford).

HARTFORD: Deriv.: identical with Hertford, army ford; possibly a ford where a marching column could cross the river in closed order. There were undoubtedly a few traders and adventurers in Suckiage (Hartford) as early as 1633, when the Dutch established "a slight forte"—Good Hope—at present day Dutch Point, near the Park River in Hartford, and the English had set a trading-house above the Dutch on the Quinnehtukqut (long tidal) River, at what is now Windsor.

On September 4, 1633 the "Griffin" came from England, bringing a large and eminent company to the Massachusetts Colony. "The circumstance of there being three eminent Ministers of God in the Ship; namely Mr. Cotton, Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone", observed Cotton Mather "made the poor People in the Wilderness.... to say,.... That.... God.... had supplied them, with.... their three great Necessities, Cotton for their Cloathing, Hooker for the Fishing and Stone for their Building." Mr. Cotton remained in Boston, Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone joined the former's people from Essex, England, at Newtown, Massachusetts. But "Two such eminent stars" says William Hubbard "such as were Mr. Cotton and Mr. Hooker, both of the first magnitude, though of differing influence, could not well continue in one and the same orb." And such was the overcrowded condition in the settlement that "For the session of the General Court in September 4th of that year 1634 the main business was about the removal of the inhabitants of New Town, consisting of such as came along with Mr. Hooker, and several other persons of quality, who also had no small dependence on his ministry and abilities." A vote of the Court on this problem showed 15 for their departure and 6 against it, because, among other reasons the Massachusetts towns were felt to be "yet weak, and in danger to be assailed." No agreement prevailed, however, and so the Court agreed to keep "a day of humiliation to seek the Lord", which was done on the 18th day of September. The sermon was preached by Mr. Cotton, who opposed the exodus and had "such an insinuating and melting way in his preaching that he would usually carry his very adversary captive after the triumphant chariot of his rhetoric, and as Solomon saith, the soft tongue breaketh the bone, which eminently appeared in this Assembly". The movement for removal was allayed for a time. But in 1635, a plantation having been selected by agents from Cambridge, Massachusetts, Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone and their entire congregation started out from New Towne to join them, and to establish themselves in the valley of the Connecticut River. (See Wethersfield, Windsor, East Hartford). The settlement was first called New Towne, for the mother town in Massachusetts, but the General Court of February 21, 1636/7 authorized "that the plantacon nowe called New-towne shal be called & named by the name of Harteford Towne", from Hertford, the capitol of Hertfordshire, the home of the Reverend Samuel Stone, in England.

HARTLAND: Deriv.: originally Heorot-ieg: stag island, to which was added tun and then "land." This town was the North East Part of the Western Lands. The General Court of May 1727 provided that all the territory included in that section (See Barkhamsted, Goshen) made over to Hartford and Windsor in 1686 should be divided between the Colony and the proprietors of those towns. The committee appointed reported in May 1733, (See Colebrook), and suggested that an Act be made and passed "granting that all the monies which shall be raised by the sale of the seven towns.... be divided to them in proportion to the list of their polls and rateable estate in the year last past, and to be secured and forever improved for the use of the schools in said towns." The Act was passed, and at the same Session, the 17,654 acres called the North East Part were set aside "for ever hereafter to be called and named, Hartland." Upon a showing to the Court of May 1761, that there were "therein resident the number of 37 families, and about seven or nine more families coming to settle therein very soon," Hartland was incorporated as a town. (See New Hartford). There is a Hartland in Devonshire. Hart(ford)land has also been suggested as the origin of the name for the association with the home of its proprietors.

HARWINTON: There is a Harvington—pronounced "Harwinton", in Worcestershire that the name could derive from, but there is no proof of ancestry and the composite from Har-tford, Win-dsor and Farming-ton is popular as the origin of the name. The first settlers were in this vicinity, a part of the Western Lands (See Colebrook, Goshen, Kent, Hartland, Barkhamsted) known as Waramaug's Reserve (See Litchfield) a year, or perhaps more, before the division and sale in 1732. The deed from the Indians was authorized by the General Court of May 1728 when it "did appoint the Worshipful John Hall, Esq." to pay to the Indians Jarrey and Jampney £16 for the conveyance of the land. A committee to divide these lands was appointed in May 1737, and in October of the following year, the Reserve was partitioned between the Governor and Company of the Connecticut Colony and the two towns of Hartford and Windsor. The Court of the same year granted both town and parish privileges. Waramaug means good fishing-place.

HEBRON: Deriv.: Hebrew: alliance, league. Numbers 13, 17-22: "And Moses sent them to spy out the land...and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain. And see the land, what it is; and the people that dwelleth therein, whether they be strong or weak..And what the land is..whether it be good or bad..fat or lean, whether there be wood therein or not..And they ascended by the south, and came unto Hebron".

Attawanhood, (Joshua) Sachem of the Western Nehantics and third son of Uncas, died in May 1676. In his will, drawn up and signed in the white men's fashion, he left large bequests of land to relatives and friends. (See Mansfield, Tolland). One of these was to a company of gentlemen from Saybrook and included "all that tract of land lying on both sides Unguoshot [Blackledge] River abutting Westward to the insight of Hartford...to Wat-tochoquiskt [a boggy meadow in southern Coventry] eight miles in breadth...eastward, and to carry that bredth throughout the length, being 18 miles, and according to a mapp drawn and subscribed with my own hand." David Barber, an early resident, observes "Likely the grantor did not know how large this vacancy was." The recipients were known as the Saybrook Legatees, and the Court of 1687 issued a patent granting them rights to all this territory. The Court of May 1699 appointed a committee to lay out and settle the east and south bounds. Settlement coming down southward from Windsor began in 1704 or 5, and on May 26, 1708, the General Assembly granted the inhabitants the privileges of a town. The October Session of the Court of 1716 at New Haven records "upon application by Nathan Dunham in behalf of the town of Hebron for a law to gotten a church and ordain an orthodox minister. It is hereby granted them." Wongushock means land at the bend of the brook, in this case, where Blackledge River bends eastward to its union with Fawn Brook.

The Reverend Samuel Peters of Hebron, in his "History of Connecticut" says this town was named because of the significance of the word in Hebrew, but the first settlers' association of themselves with the envoys of Moses who were sent to "spy out the land" undoubtedly influenced their decision.

KENT: Deriv.: Possibly from the Walsh caint, plain or open country. This is one of the five towns in the Western Lands of Litchfield County whose origin is so closely connected as to be almost identical. (See Barkhamsted, Goshen, North Canaan). When the general Court of October 1737 decreed that these lands should be sold for settlement, Kent, then unnamed, was included merely as "the southern town, bounded westerly on said [Housatonic] river" and it was authorized to be sold at auction at the Court House in Windham on the first Tuesday of the following March." This was one part of the single Act that disposed of a large part of Litchfield County, the present towns of Goshen, Canaan, Cornwall, Salisbury and Kent. These, with Norfolk, were named in a group by the Assembly of May 1738 and summarily annexed to Hartford County. Kent was bounded in the same year. A part was set off to Washington in 1779 and another part of the original territory to Warren in 1786. It was incorporated as a town in October 1739. Since the towns in this group were named, not by petition from their several localities, as was the custom, but by pronouncement of the General Assembly, it is to be assumed that it was here that the choices of name were made. Two are Biblical, four have English place-names, and all had attractive associations for the settlers. There were many settlers here from Kent County.

Scatacook, the Indian name for this vicinity, interpreted as pronounced by an Indian of that tribe in 1859, was Pisgachtigok, the place where a river branches or divides.

KILLINGLY: Deriv.: May have a derivation in Kelling, from the Old English Cyllan berg, home of Cylla's (pers.) people. In the early records it is often spelled Kellingley. In 1653, the second John Winthrop, having gained authority in June 1659 from the General Court, obtained from Allumps (James) and two other chief men of the Quinebaug tribe, a grant to the large tract of land about here known as the Quinebaug (long pond) Country. Liberty to establish a plantation there was granted him in 1671, but due to Indian occupation, warfare, and other troubles, the settlement was not begun until 1693. In May 1708, the General Court granted the privileges of a town and defined its boundaries, desiring further that "the Hon^{ble} Governour commissioneate Lt. Aspinall to train and command the souldiers in the said township, and to give a name to the said town, and also appoint the figure of a brand for their horses." In the face of this varied assignment, Aspinwall referred the selection of a name for the town to the governor. Governor Saltonstall was a native of Haverhill, Massachusetts, but the manorial possessions of his family in England lay in Killanslie and Pontefract, Yorkshire. (See Pomfret). Killingly, therefore is taken from the former.

"Leave to gather a church" was granted by the Court of October 1715. The name commonly used, even after the authorization of the governor's choice, was Aspinock, applied first to the plain now in Putnam, running east from the dwelling of Lt. Aspinwall. The Indian suffix aucke or ock (the place where) may have been joined to part of the surname, to form a composite English-Indian name. Or there may be a connection with aspunne-auke, high ground.

KILLINGWORTH: Deriv.: the worp, homestead of Cylla's (pers.) people. Kenelworth would be Cynechild's worp. "In October 1663, the Legislature of Connecticut resolved that there should be a towne at Hammonasset (the Indian name applied to the tract now constituting Killingworth), and the same month twelve planters removed into it." says John Warner Barber of the origin of this town. "These were joined by sixteen others in the course of two or three years; and the town was divided into 30 rights, one . . . for the first minister that should be settled there, and another for the support of the ministry forever. . . . this town was called 'the plantation of Hammonasset' and 'the Plantation between Guilford and Saybrook' until May, 1666/7. At that time the place was named Kenilworth, after a town in the county of Warwick, England, from which there were settlers. The name is thus spelt in the early records of the town and colony, but by corrupt spelling or pronunciation, the present form was finally adopted." The Court of May 8, 1735, divided the town into two "Distinct Ecclesiasticall Societys." Hammonasset was the name of the Indian tribe who lived here. (See Clinton).

LEBANON: Deriv.: Hebrew, white. Isaiah 35, 1-2: "The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon." This town began as a series of purchases called the four proprieties, the Five-Mile, the Fitch and Mason, a tract adjoining the Five-mile, and the Whiting Purchase. By agreement between the dissociated planters, these several parcels were ultimately united, and on October 14, 1697, the General Court enacted that "the new plantation situate to the westward of Norwich bounds shall be called Lebanon."

"All such immunities, privileg and powers as generally other townes within this colonie have and doe enioy" were granted in October 1700, with permission "to gather a church". The boundaries, over which some confusion and uncertainty ensued, were established by the Assembly of May 1705. This was the first town in Connecticut to be given a Biblical name.

LEDYARD: A few pioneer settlers found their way up the Thames River into what is now Ledyard within a few years after the settlement of New London, and the locality was known as Pequonnock (See Bridgeport). Later, John Winthrop, Jr. with a number of the original settlers considerably increased the settlement here, adding to it the authority of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay. When the name Groton was given to the locality, this area was included. In 1725, however, the north part of the settlement had grown to proportions that felt justified in requesting the General Assembly to constitute it an ecclesiastical Society, and the Assembly of October 14 of that year granted permission and laid the bounds. It was known as Groton North Society or The Second Society of Groton until 1836, when it was incorporated as a town and given the name of Ledyard for Colonel William Ledyard of Groton, Commander of Fort Griswold, who was brutally killed in its defense on September 6, 1781, when the traitor Benedict Arnold burned New London.

LISBON: A large tract of land "near Showtucket river and abutting southerly on Queenapaug river" was conceded very early by the white men to a band of Indians tributary to Uncas, and called by them the Showtuckets. After this settlement was broken up by King Philip's War, lands in the vicinity were sold to proprietors from Ipswich, Massachusetts, and by 1718, 16 persons of the role of accepted inhabitants were characterized as "Farmers in ye Crotch of ye Rivers." The ecclesiastical Society which grew up here, known at first as the North East Society of Norwich, was named Newent, in October 1722, obviously from Newent in Gloucestershire, the home in England of the Perkins family, influential early settlers. It was incorporated as a parish in May of the following year and as a town in 1786, when it was named Lisbon, doubtless from the fact that Hezekiah and Jabez Perkins and other commercial shippers traded from Norwich with the port of Lisbon, in Portugal. Showtucket, pronounced by the Indians "Shootucket" was Mohegan, meaning land between the rivers. The determining part of the word show or shaw is a contraction of nashaw: between; the termination et makes it applicable to the land there. "Perhaps" says Miss Caulkins "this was the original name of Norwich. The situation is such as the Indians would describe by that word."

LITCHFIELD: Deriv.: Probably from lich-field, field of the dead. In 1715 "a Town Meating in Hartford" appointed a committee which was to treat with the Indians relative to the purchase of these lands, "Accting in Concert with the Committee Apoynted . . . By the town of Windsor. . . to . . . lay out one or two towns. . . hoom [home] Lotts and devisions of Land. . . as They Shall Judge Will Accomodate a suitable number of Inhabitants." The result was the sale by them to persons from Hartford and Windsor of what is now the town of Litchfield, sometimes included in early references with the land around Waterbury called Matatucke, for "fifteen pounds money." In 1718, a Company was formed for the settlement of the town, and land making up the whole plantation, a section called Bantam, was bought within the year. The settlement was endorsed by the General Assembly of May 1719, when the existing name was bestowed upon it, from Lichfield in Staffordshire, the home in England of the Boylston family. It was chartered by the Court of May 1818 as the Corporation of the Village of Litchfield. This was changed to the Borough of Litchfield on March 21, 1879. Matatuck means land not-wooded.

In the opinion of Johnathan Trumbull, the name Bantam (Bahamtam) appearing in the first deed recorded in Litchfield Town Records (May 1719) is almost certainly of Indian origin, and if so, is a corruption of Peäntam (Narragansett: pey aun tam), he prays or praying, a word used to designate a Christian Indian. As a place-name, it is analagous to Nonantam: he blesses, the place near Roxbury, Massachusetts, where John Eliot's first Indian converts were gathered. There is also a record here of Weramaug, a Sachem of Bantam, who was converted to the Christian faith by the Reverend Daniel Boardman, (ordained in 1716, the first minister of New Milford) against the most bitter opposition of his tribe. When Weramaug died, about 1735, he was "attended by Dr. Boardman, from whose evidence it would seem that his teachings had some effect." Bantam, then, could easily have been a name locally applied, possibly in derision, certainly with emphasis, to Weramaug, and the name, as was common, passed along from him to his lands. (See Harwinton).

There is a conflicting supposition which cannot be overlooked, that the name derives from Bantam in Java, a region with which the English had had commercial relations since the Elizabethan period.

LYME: a large forest district, also Lym or Lim.

Settlement was commenced on the east side of the Connecticut River about 1664 on this tract which originally belonged to the town of Saybrook. In May 1667 the General Court at Hartford ordered "Ye Plantation on ye East side of ye River over against Say-brooke for ye future be named Lyme". This section then included what is now Lyme, East Lyme, Old Lyme and part of East Haddam. The present town of Lyme is not the oldest, but that part identified in origin and early history with the North Society. In 1824 the rights of an independent Society were granted to inhabitants of the north end of Lyme and the south end of Haddam East Society. This is one of the few towns to be named before its church was established. The town boundaries were determined by the setting off of East Lyme in 1839, Old Lyme in 1855 and East Haddam, taken from Haddam, in May 1724.

The Indian name for the eastern part of the original territory was Nehantic, taken from the name of the tribe native to that country along the shore between the Connecticut and Niantic rivers. (See East Lyme).

The present name is taken from Lyme Regis, the home of the Hill and Humphrey families known to be in America before 1650, in Dorsetshire, England, a fishing village on the small river Lyme, at its entrance into the British Channel. Geographical similarity may have influenced the naming of Lyme, Connecticut.

MADISON: A part of the land which now comprises this town was included in the deed of September 29, 1639 (See Guilford) to the Reverend Henry Whitfield and his associates. This was followed by a second purchase, made on September 20, 1641, from Wequash, Sachem of the Niantics, known as "the pious", for "a frize coate, a blanket, an Indian Coate, one . . . Dutchman's coate, a shirt, a pair of stockings, a pair of shoes and, a Faddom of Wampum" of all that section called the Neck. Settlement and expansion went forward with Guilford for a century and a half. In 1699, a petition to the town of Guilford to make the settlers in the eastern part a "village" was refused, but a few years later "At a Toun meting held aprall ye 6, 1703, in answare to our sd, este farmers Petitioners . . . the toun then Voted that the sd. este farmers on the este side of Neck river have libarty . . . to be a societie, and to procure a minister." This was confirmed by an Act of the General Court of October 1707. Three years later the name East Guilford came into use. In 1753 North Bristol Society was incorporated, and after several attempts, the two societies were incorporated as a town by Act of May 1826 and named in compliment to the fourth president of the United States, and the boundaries were ordered to be the same as those of the constituted Societies.

MANCHESTER: Deriv.: from the Old British Mamucion. Mam was Irish, the name for a hill; Chester, a city or walled town.

One of the four towns whose territory was originally included in the town of Hartford, this section, settled in 1672, was known from about 1682 until 1772 as the Five-miles. "Att a Town Metting of the Inhabitants of ye Town of Hartford held ffebr 13th 1706/7 It was Voated and agreed that a Committy be Chosen To defend the Rights of the Town on the East Side the great Riuer, but Especially their Right in all or any part of the fiue Miles." The history of the town is then embodied with that of Hartford until the year 1783, when East Hartford was incorporated as an independent town which included the present Manchester, embodied in and known as Orford Parish of East Hartford, so constituted by Act of May 1772. This was then identified with the history of East Hartford until 1823, when Orford Parish was incorporated a town and named Manchester from the city in Lancashire, England, from which there was a considerable early migration.

MANSFIELD: Deriv.: open land by Mam. (See Manchester). This town is included in the part of eastern Connecticut called Joshua's Tract. Attawanhood (Joshua), Sachem of the Western Nehantics, bequeathed a great tract of land here to Major John Mason and other Norwich men in his will signed at his home in Lyme on February 29, 1675. (See Hebron, Tolland, Columbia). The gift embraced the present towns of Windham, Mansfield, Columbia, Chaplin and parts of Hampton and Scotland. Settlement here began about 1692, soon after settlement in Windham, of which it was at first the northern section. The first town meeting was held on June 12 of that year, and sites were selected for three villages, Hither-place (Windham Center), Pond-place (Mansfield Center) and Willimantic. By a vote taken in February 1694, the meetings on the Sabbath were to be held two Sabbaths at Hither-place and one at Pond-place, thus alternating between the settlements. This practise was broken by only one interval until the incorporation of Mansfield as a town in 1702.

There is a Mansfield in Nottinghamshire, England, but the name is more probably from Major Moses Mansfield of New Haven, who, in the Indian wars, routed a party of Indians somewhere in this region and was given a tract of land now comprised within the limits of this town.

The Indian name was Mawbesetuck: at the place where the pond is. Willimantic: a good look out or where (the river) winds around a bold hill or cedar swamp.

Note on the naming of Moses Mansfield. (Barber, p. 552). "his parents, who resided either in North or East Haven in crossing the East river in a canoe were upset, and their infant whom they were taking across the river in order for baptism, floated away from them. . . . Being well wrapped up in blankets, the infant floated down the stream and lodged among the rushes, where he was taken up, having received no injury. His parents intended to name him Richard, but from the circumstances of his being taken from the water and from the rushes, he was called Moses."

MARLBOROUGH: Deriv.: Possibly Maerla's hill, possibly from the Old English mergelle: gentian. Borough is burg, fortress or the equivalent.

It is said that three settlers from three adjoining towns and as many counties came face to face here to constitute the origin of this town. But it is certain that on May 15, 1736, fourteen subscribers, "Inhabitants in Colchester, Hebron and Glastenbury" petitioned the General Assembly for winter privileges. "We would Humbly Shew to your Hon^{rs} our Difficult Circumstances [There was no bridge over Salmon River, among others] our Living So far from any Pls. of the publick worship of God. Some Living Seven, Some Eight miles & Several of us have so Weakley wives y^t [they] are not able to go to the Publick worship of God... their are above 60 children in our neighborhood which are so small they are not able to go." The petition was granted, but without release from taxes to the parishes to which these persons had originally been assigned, and it was only after numerous petitions both to the Assembly and to the Churches of the three towns that on May 11, 1747, the release was granted and "the same shall be known and distinguished by the name of Marlborough." It was incorporated from its three neighbors as a town in 1803.

It was known in its early history as New Marlborough, for Marlborough in Massachusetts. David Bigelow, the largest tax payer in Marlborough (Connecticut) Society, came from a family conspicuous in the history of the Massachusetts Marlborough. Ezra Carter, another influential member of the new Society, also came from the same Massachusetts town. The carrying-over of the name of the mother town in Massachusetts followed a pattern (See Hartford, Wethersfield, Windsor). The Massachusetts town in turn, must have been named for Marlborough in Wiltshire, England, from which there was a large early migration.

MERIDEN: Deriv.: from Marldon, hill overgrown with gentian.

This was the northern part of the tract bought by planters of the New Haven Colony in 1638 and settled as New Haven Village. (See Wallingford). At a special meeting of the General Court at Hartford on January 26, 1686, it was voted that "This Court grants Weathersfeild, Middletown and Farmington all those vacant lands between Wallingford bownds and the bownds of those plantations to make a village therein." This grant included that part of the present Meriden called Belcher's Farm, which, or at which was the place already known as Moridam, though the whole north tract was "commonly called Wallingsford Purchase Lands". In May 1725, "the north farmers in Wallingsford" petitioned to the General Court to be made "a separate society for setting up and carrying on the public worship." This petition was granted and the settlement known as Wallingford North Society. In May 1728, however, it was petitioned that "Merridan farm" be annexed to this, and that "said (entire) society be called and known by the name of Merriden." Incorporation as a town was delayed until the second Thursday in May 1806.

Long before there was any settlement here, the name Meriden, or something like it, was in spoken use in this locality as an identification of a property in the forest. Johnathan Gilbord (Gilbert) of Hartford, father-in-law of the Andrew Belcher who became the subsequent owner and by whose name it was known, was the first white man to own it. The Gilbert family came from Marldon Parish in Compton, Devonshire, of which the subsequent Meriden is undoubtedly a corruption. Its first written use is found on a deed signed on October 14, 1664, from "Seaukett, Indian (abiding in or about Hartford on Conec't)" to an Edward Higby, sent there by Captain Gilbert to occupy his property "entitled and known by the name Merideen." Thus the name was in use when the English place-names were most commonly adopted to perpetuate in the new country the family seat in the old.

Among the earliest names of sections were "doggs mezey" (Dogs' Misery), a swamp so thick and tangled that the dogs of the hunters were often killed when their quarry escaped into it; and "pilgrooms harbour", Pilgrims' Harbor, a section originally in West Meriden in a swampy tract with a brook and a spring running through it, on the old road to New Haven. As this name dates from 1664 it derives perhaps from the fact that the section served to harbor certain regicides who fled to this country when Charles II came to the throne in 1660. Fleeing from New Haven to Massachusetts they stayed at or near this spot for several days. Another was the Old Fly, from the Dutch Vley, morass, early applied to Peat Works Pond.

MIDDLEBURY: the middle bury; between Wood-bury, South-bury and Water-bury.

Although there were settlers in this locality as early as 1702, the greatest influx was after the Revolution. Its origin, settlement and early history are closely associated with that of Waterbury and Woodbury. In May 1757, 33 individuals living in the western part of Waterbury First Society (West Farms) contiguous parts of Westbury, Oxford, Southbury and the Old Society of Woodbury sent in a petition for winter privileges to the General Court. This being denied, the petition was renewed in 1760, this time asking for full privileges. To this the first Society of Waterbury sent in remonstrances, "the effect of dismemberment", they claimed "would be to cut us up into mouthfuls ready for the devourer." Again the petition was not granted, and two later ones were likewise refused. In 1786, however, the "old Society" of Waterbury agreed to pay for preaching there for eight winter Sabbaths, and in 1790, West Farms and the adjoining portions of Woodbury and Southbury were made into a distinct Society by the name of Middlebury. The Society was incorporated with town privileges in 1807. The ninth—and last—of the parishes and towns in the immediate vicinity to be given a -bury name. (See Waterbury).

MIDDLEFIELD: The first settlement here began about 1700, first from Middletown and then from other towns. It grew as the southwestern part of ancient Middletown until 1644, when "inhabitants of the first Society in Midletown living in the southwest part of said town bounds" were granted the privileges of a separate ecclesiastical Society "called and known by the name of Middlefield". It was incorporated as a town from Middletown in May 1866, retaining the parish name.

The name Coginchaug, long swamp, was applied by the English to a tract of low land west of the village on both sides the little river, of which this was a northern extremity. The present name is a preservation of a part of the name of the mother town.

MIDDLETOWN: An unvarying tradition gives 1650 as the date for the settlement of this town. On August 15, 1639, the General Court at Hartford records that "The Manifold insolencies that haue beene offered of late by the Indians, putt the Court in mind of that wch hath beene too long neglected," and it was concluded that 100 men "be...sent downe to Mattabesecke, where severall guilty persons reside." A committee to organize a settlement, therefore, was arranged, and the Court of September 11, 1651 "ordered, sentenced and decreed, that Mattabeseck shall bee a Towne." In November 1653, it was named. "This Courte approves that the name of the Plantatyon commonly caled Mattabesick shall for time to come bee Middelltowne." The original territory was very large, taking in the present towns of Middlefield, Portland, Cromwell, Chatham, (East Hampton) and a small part of Berlin.

Mattabesett denotes a place at a (relatively) great rivulet or brook. The original location would be at the point where the greater of the two small rivers in Middletown, runs into the Connecticut.

MILFORD: Deriv.: ford by a mill.

Milford, whose settlement dates from 1639, is one of the oldest towns in the state and one of the most unusual in origin. Her settlers came to Quinnipiac (New Haven) in 1638, decided not to remain there and, with their minister, the Reverend Peter Prudden, and some persons from Wethersfield made a purchase of land here on February 12 of that year. They removed from New Haven on foot and immediately constructed a "common house" at the head of the harbor on the west side, "and a few rude huts for temporary residences." They then proceeded to form their civil polity—to establish themselves, in fact, into a little republic, laying out sections at first close to the common house: Westfield, Eastfield, Mill Neck, the last bounded by Wharf Street and Bear Neck Lane. They voted among other things that their magistrates should have power to call a General Court, or Town Meeting, whenever they might see cause, or the public good require it. At the second of these, held on March 24, 1640 "It was agreed between William Fowler and the brethren that he should build a mill and have her going by the last of September." And at the next Court, that of November 24, 1640, entirely oblivious of the authority either of Connecticut Colony at Hartford or of the Jurisdiction of New Haven, from which they had come, "with common consent and general vote of the freemen, the plantation was named Milford." Her existence as an independent Colony, however, ended in 1643 when for the first time her deputies went up to the Court at New Haven. In 1662, when "the freest Charter under the cope of Heaven" summarily turned over to the Connecticut Colony all the territory of the New Haven Jurisdiction, and the Colony invited all the towns to send deputies to the Court of October 9 at Hartford, Milford was one of those not to accept. In 1664, however, "severing all ties with New Haven," she united separately with Connecticut.

Barber says that the settlement was named "in Commemoration of the town of this name (Pembroke) in their native England", but Pembroke is in Wales. The fact of the mill being built on the ford (the bridge was not completed then, and the ford was in general use) must have made the name significant in a very realistic way to the majority of the townspeople.

The Indian name for this locality was Wepawaug: at the narrows, usually the crossing-place.

MONROE: Both Monroe and Huntington (Shelton), of which it was originally a part, share the origin and early history of ancient Stratford. The section now the town of Monroe was first occupied by persons probably coming from Stratford about 1755. These settlers originally attended meeting as a part of the First Society of Huntington, but by 1761 they had presented a petition to the General Assembly for separate incorporation. The Assembly of May 1762, upon receiving a favorable report from the committee appointed to "view the circumstances" the year before, granted the request, creating the Society of New Stratford. This was made a town by Act of 1823, when it was named to honor James Monroe, then fifth president of the United States.

MONTVILLE: This tract of land was the original property of Uncas, Sachem and the Mohegan branch of the Pequot Indians. In 1670 it was settled as the northern part of New London, laid out in 1646 by John Winthrop, Jr. and others from Boston, and its early history is indissolubly associated with its neighboring towns. In May 1713, the inhabitants of the north part of the town of New London petitioned to the General Court at Hartford for authority to incorporate as an independent Society, and this right was granted by an Act of May of the following year. It was known as the North Society of New London until October 12, 1786, when the General Court at New Haven constituted it a distinct and separate town by the name of Montville, a French descriptive meaning hill-residence.

Indian names that occur in the vicinity are Massapeag: great water-country, and Oxoboxo: the brook which flows out of the small pond.

MORRIS: Believed to have been settled before August 1723, this town had its origin and early settlement with the town of Litchfield, of which it constituted the southern part. In October 1767 "inhabitants....consisting of about seventy families....praying that that part of the said town of Litchfield, be made and formed into a distinct ecclesiastical society", this was voted by the Court and the Society named South Farms. In 1859, however, it was incorporated from Litchfield as an independent town and name for Captain (later Major) James Morris (1752-1820), an educational reformer, who in 1790 had opened a widely-known academy.

NAUGATUCK: Deriv.: Algonquin: Nau-ka-lungh. The traditional origin of the name is from a remarkable tree, one tree, which probably served as a landmark, and this was authenticated by Eunice Mauwee, the daughter of Chuce (See Seymour) as one which afforded the Indians shade when they came to the Rimmon Falls to fish. It may also derive from Wnogque tookoke: bend-in-the-river-place. This name was applied to Stockbridge, Massachusetts, and would apply equally to this locality.

The valley of the Naugatuck was settled between 1675 and 1680 by people who came from Massachusetts by way of Hartford and Farmington to Waterbury. Although allotments of land were made on the east side of the river as early as 1687, settlement was not begun here until after 1700, though the region was known as South (of Waterbury) Farms. Petitions to be made a Society were sent up to the General Assembly of October 1772. This was granted by the Court of the following May under the name of Salem. Town privileges were granted in May 1844. The boundaries included parts from Bethany, Oxford and Waterbury. The borough was chartered in 1893.

The Indian name, not in common use until 1800, was transferred to the river from some locality on or near it, and from river to valley and town. Naugatuck river was named in the first deed to Thomas Wheeler in 1657, and Nawcatuck river in an Indian deed of 1668. But elsewhere it is "the river that cometh from Nawgatuck".

NEW BRITAIN: Deriv.: the land of the Britons. The origin and early history of this town is closely associated with that of Farmington and Berlin. It was a part of the Great Swamp Society of Farmington, itself a part of Weathersfield, created in this locality by the General Court of October 11, 1705, upon petition of the inhabitants. In 1722 the name of the Society was changed to Kinsington. As the community grew, the need for two parishes became evident, and the Court of May 1754, created and bounded "one other Society in Kinsington", which "shall be known by the name of New Briton". For civil purposes, however, this parish remained a part of the town of Farmington until the incorporation of Berlin in 1785, when it became a part of the new town. New Britain was a growing parish of Berlin until 1850, when it was incorporated as an independent town, retaining the name given the parish. It was incorporated as a borough in the same year and as a city in 1870.

NEW CANAAN: Between 1670 and 1725, a considerable number of the towns adjoining the shore towns were settled as parts of ancient Stamford and Norwalk. One of these was New Canaan, settled about 1700.

The adjoining towns, Norwalk, New Canaan, Wilton and the western part of Westport, are all included in the original grants. The deed to "the meadows and uplands, adjoininge, lying on the west side of Norwalke River" was drawn only a few weeks after that of Roger Ludlow (See Wilton) "betwixt Daniell Patricke and Mahacken, and Naramake and Pemenate Hewnompom indians of Norwake and Makentouh." It was signed on April 20, 1640 and comprised "the ground . . . as farr up in the country as an indian can goe in a day, from sun risinge to sun settinge . . . for which Lands the sayd indians are to receive of the sayd Daniell Patricke of wampum tenn fathoms, hatchetts three, howes three, when shippes come; sixe glasses, twelfe tobackoe pipes, three knives, tenn drills, tenn needles; this as full satisfaction for the aforementioned lands, and for the peacable possession of which the aforementioned Makachemill doth promise and undertake to silence all opposers." Another tract conveyed to Richard Web and thirteen others, planters of Norwalk, on February 15, 1651, covered the remaining part of what is now New Canaan, except what was obtained from Stamford.

Petition for the rights of an ecclesiastical Society was made to the General Assembly of May 1731. This was granted, and the boundaries laid. In 1801 the town was incorporated, retaining the same name and the same general boundaries as those laid down for the parish. There can be little doubt that this name was originally chosen for its Biblical connotations (See Canaan) rather than for the town of Canaan in Litchfield County, similarly named in 1738.

Rowayton, an equivalent of Noroton, designated the Five-mile River between Norwalk and Darien and lands near it.

NEW FAIRFILED: Deriv.: See Fairfield. In October 1707, the General Assembly at New Haven, upon petition of inhabitants of Fairfield, granted them "a certain tract of land to be for a township, lying north of and near to Danbury . . . bounding easterly upon Newmilford, westerly upon the colonie line", and extending 14 miles north from Danbury. This roughly comprised the three later towns of New Milford, Sherman and New Fairfield, of which the last was known as the Lower Seven Miles. Several circumstances retarded settlement here, which seems to have been first about 1730. The Indians were less friendly than elsewhere, and there were expectations of an Indian attack from Canada. Also the line between New York and Connecticut was not settled until 1731, when the grant of "The Oblong" by the Colony to New York as a compensation for lands settled on the Sound, both disappointed the proprietors and narrowed the township on the west by several miles. In 1740, however, it was "resolved by the . . . Assembly that the inhabitants of [the] . . . tract of land called New Fairfield have all the privileges that other towns in this Colony have and the same is hereby granted unto them": In May 1742, the town was divided by the Assembly "upon the memorial of . . . inhabitants of the northern part" into two ecclesiastical Societies. In October 1728, it was annexed to Fairfield County. The name is taken from the mother town.

Potatuck (Pootatuck, Mohegan: Pownduckkuck) denotes the country about the falls, is the name originally given to the lands north of Derby on the Housatonic now in Southbury, nearly opposite the mouth of Potatuck brook in Newtown, where there was a village of Potateuk or "falls Indians."

NEW HARTFORD: Deriv.: See Hartford. In 1732, Hartford and Windsor divided their part of the Western Lands, giving to Hartford the territory now embraced by New Hartford, Winchester, Hartland and the eastern part of Harwinton. The southeast portion, now New Hartford, was then valued by the proprietors at fifteen shillings an acre. Each tax-payer of Hartford on the list of 1720, or his heirs, was made a proprietor of an undivided share in some one of these townships, in proportion to his list. New Hartford fell to the lot of 182 proprietors. A committee was appointed to set off lands to such as wished to settle thereon, and all who entered their names for settling were obligated "in two years... to build a tenantable house of 16 ft. square and break up 2 or 3 acres of... land... and in one year more... personally to inhabit by themselves or family... and to continue to inhabit for the space of 3 years longer." Surveyors sent out from Hartford to view the land decided upon Town Hill as the most suitable for settlement, and an Act of May 1733 bounded the territory and named it New Hartford for the mother town. This was the only one of the four townships colonized by the original proprietors. The Court of October 1738 constituted it "one entire town and called by the name of New Hartford." (See Colebrook, Canaan, Goshen).

NEW HAVEN: "It hath bene the will of God", wrote John Davenport, the young lecturer and curate of St. Lawrence, Old Jewry, London, about 1624, "to make my ministry, for the space of this sixe yeares, in London, publick, and eminent, wch hath Caused some to looke upon me wth a squint eye, and harken to my sermons wth the leaft eare,... insomuch that I am traduced... to his Ma. [Majesty] for a puritan, or one that is puritanically affected." On June 26, 1637, John Winthrop recorded the arrival in Boston of a group from London including Davenport. He and his company had left England with the intention of settling in the Massachusetts Bay Colony, of which the General Court offered them any unoccupied place and the different towns various locations. But one of the company had visited Saybrook, Connecticut in 1636, and the outcome of the Pequot War had made known and available the territory to the west of it. On March 30, 1639, Davenport, Theophilus Eaton, a life-long friend, and a number of others sailed from Boston for 'Quillipeage'. Here they established a day of Extraordinary Humiliation and the whole assembly of free planters entered into a solemn covenant. This was practically identical with the existing ecclesiastical and civil organization, laws and practices of the Massachusetts Bay Colony embodied by John Cotton there in 1636. "It was Called a plantatiō Couent to distinguish itt frō Chur. [Church] Couent wch Could nott att thatt time bee made, a Chur. nott being then gathered," Until such a government could be organized, power to manage the public affairs of the Company was put into the hands of a committee. Negotiations for the sale of lands had begun before the Davenport company had left Massachusetts but were incomplected when they arrived at Quinnipiac. It was not until November 24, 1638, that the purchase of the territory "betweene Theophilus Eaton and John Davenport and others English Planters att Quinopiocke" was negotiated with the Indians. Besides a promise of protection, Momaquin and his braves received the "free gift" of "Twelve Coates of english trucking cloat [h], Twelve Alcumy spoones, Twelve Hatchetts, twelve hose, two dozen of knives, twelve porengers and four Cases of ffrench knives and sizers."

A copy of a letter in the British Museum written by Mr. Davenport after his crossing and dated at Quinipock, September 28, 1639, says of the present name, "The sight of y^e harbour did so please y^e Captain of the Ship and all the passengers that he called it Fayre Haven." In any event, the next year a General Court held at New Haven on the 1st day of the 7th month 1640, made the name official by recording, "This town now named New Haven."

Quinnipiac means long-water country.

NEWINGTON: The original Pyquág (land naturally clear) covered a tract comprising the present towns of Wethersfield, Newington, Rocky Hill, Glastonbury, parts of Beckley Quarter, Kensington (Berlin) and four square miles of Marlborough. The first settlement in what is now Newington seems to have been begun when "20 acres apiece upon the account that they are to build a saw-mill" was granted to four men in Wethersfield under date of March 29, 1684. This was at a place then called Pipe-Stave Swamp, which was within the limits of Cow Plain. A second general division of lands here was voted by Wethersfield on February 23, 1693/4. Growth of the settlement by 1708 justified a petition to the town for the establishment of an independent ecclesiastical Society, and after some delay, "those living in the west division of lands... of the town of Wethersfield" were granted by Act of May 1713, authority "to be a distinct parish for the publick worship of God. An Act laying a tax on the West Society in Wethersfield of May 1721, authorized "that the said parish or society be called Newington."

The choice of name was undoubtedly influenced by the residence in Newington, Oxfordshire, of the family of Ensign Richard Boardman, a prominent member of this "westwardmost" Society of Wethersfield.

Newington was incorporated as a town in 1871.

NEW LONDON: Deriv.: Londinium from londo, wild, bold. There were at least three white persons on the ground in this locality in the summer of 1645, for it was, as John Winthrop the elder observed in June 1646 at Boston, "of great concernment to have it planted, to be a curb to the Indians." The moving spirits in the settlement were "Mr. John Winthrop, Jun. and Mr. Thomas Peter, a minister, brother to Mr. Peter of Salem, Massachusetts." The oldest fragment of record extant in the town is "The Ancientest Book", of which the earliest dates are 1616 and 7. This speaks of the settlement as Nameeug, and this was the only name used until 1649, when at a town meeting held on February 22 it is recorded that "the inhabitants did consent and desier that the plantation may be called London." This name came into colloquial use soon to be generally known in the abbreviated style of the times as 'Lon'on Town' or 'New Lon'on.' The General Court of the Colony did not concur in this selection, however, and at the Session of May 1649 among the regulations concerning the growing town at the mouth of the (later) Thames, appears: "6. The Courte commends the name of Faire Harbour to them for to bee the name of theire Towne." This was anything but welcome. A 1651 towne meeting record states that "The Towne have sent to the Court by there Deputys Hugh Calkin & Thomas Mynor that the Towne's name may be called London.", but the application was not successful. The Court bounded the town to the satisfaction of the inhabitants, but under the old name of Nameeage. In preference to Fayre Harbour this name was in common use until 1657/8, when on March 11 the Court authorized that "The Plantation at Pequet is named by this Court, New London, wth a preamble to bee inserted about the same wch is inserted in the closure of ye Acts of this Session."

The "preamble" follows: "Whereas it hath bene a comendable practise of ye inhabitants of all the Collonies of these parts, that as this Countrey hath its denomination from our deare native Countrey of England, and thence is called New England, soe the planters, in their first settling of most new Plantations, have given names to those Plantations of some Citties and Townes in England, thereby intending to keep up and leave to posterity the memoriall of severall places of note there, as Boston, Hartford, Windsor, York, Ipswitch, Brantree, Exeter: This Court considering that there hath yet noe place in any of the Collonies bene named in memory of ye City of London, there being a new plantation within this Jurisdiction of Conecticut settled upon ye faire River of Monhegan, in ye Pequot Countrey, it being an excellent harbour and a fit and convenient place for future trade, it being alsoe the only place wch ye English of these parts have possessed by conquest, and yt by a very iust war upon yt great and warlike people, ye Pequots, that therefore they might thereby leave to posterity the memory of yt renowned citty of London, from whence we had our transportation, have thught fit, in honour to that famous City to cal ye said Plantation, New London."

The Indian name, Nameaug means fishing-place. The Dutch called the river the Frisius and the Little Fresh River, but the name the Indians gave to it has been lost. The English called it from the Mohegan tribe along its banks, and, in striking opposition to the selection of the Dutch, the Great River. Towawag is sometimes substituted about 1654 for Nameag, and means old or abandoned land. (See Stonington).

NEW MILFORD: Deriv.: See Milford.

Settlement in this locality began in 1707, a land company having been organized at Milford which bought from the Indians a tract called Weantinogue, later known as the North Purchase. The first settler was John Noble, who came from Westfield, Massachusetts. The purchase was given official recognition by the General Court of October 1713 thus: "The Court doe grant to the town of Milford, purchasers of a tract of land of the Indians, (which land lieth at Wiantenuck) for a township...libertie...to take out a pattent...as also that they doe make a settlement upon said land within five years...the name of the said town to be New Milford"—for the mother town. The General Assembly of October 1712 granted incorporation as a town, but an ecclesiastical Society was not gathered until May 1715. Barber estimates the number of the congregation at this time at eight men and five women.

Weantinock is possibly from waranatanang, where the water whirls but it may designate the place where the river winds about the hill or the land about the hill. (See Mansfield: Willimantic).

NEWTOWN: The General Assembly of May 1708, granted that "all that tract of land lying on the west side of Stratford or Potatuck River" and otherwise bounded, "shall be one intire town, called by the name of Newtowne." The region was generally known by its ancient Indian name of Pohtatuck. Upon petition of the inhabitants in 1711, it was incorporated as a town, and the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society were granted by an Act of May 1715. The name is descriptive, and also has associations with Newtown, Massachusetts.

Potatuck, the equivalent of the Mohegan powntuckkuck denoted the country about the falls.

NORFOLK: Deriv.: In England, originally the northern people, in contradistinction to the Suf-(south)-folk.

Land here was a part of that apportioned to the Colony when the Western Lands were divided between the towns of Hartford and Windsor and the Connecticut Colony in May 1726. In October 1737, the General Court authorized that "the northwestern township, that joyns to the Colony line and upon Hartford and Windsor lands, be sold at Hartford at the court house to the highest bidders, on the second Tuesday of April next." But the auction was not held until 1754, from Middletown, though two families had established themselves within the limits of the present town in 1744. After the public sale, settlement went forward rapidly, and the General Assembly of 1758 "shewing, that there are settled in said township forty-three families, there are hereby made and created an entire town by the name of the town of Norfolk."

The name is from Norfolk shire, one of the counties from which migration to America very early was most popular. (See Colebrook, Goshen, Barkhamsted, North Canaan).

NORTH BRANFORD: Deriv.: See Branford.

When Totoket (See Branford) was purchased of the Indians in 1638, two white families were already in residence here. One was Thomas Whitway, an Indian interpreter, who lived in the vicinity of Foxon. A more extensive settlement was begun about 1720. Tradition says that for a long time these settlers were accustomed to leave their homes in the spring with their provisions and farming tools, for a sort of backwoods life through the summer months, occupying the clearings at the base of Totoket Mountain, from which they gathered ample crops, returning to their homes with the approach of winter. In May 1744, parish privileges were petitioned for, and the General Assembly of May 1750, "Resolved that the said Society be called Northford." "The Indian name of the place" says John Warner Barber "appears to have been Paug.", and it was so known for a great many years. The second Society to come into existence as the southern division of the north part of Branford was usually known as "the village". In 1799 the residents asked to be incorporated as a town separate from Branford, but the petition was not granted until the Session of May 1831, when Northford and North Branford Village Societies were united to form the town which was named from the latter. Paug means pond, an abbreviation of Pistepaug, miry or muddy brook. Foxon or Poxon was the name of the chief counsellor of Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans. One of the letters of John Eliot speaks of him as considered among the Massachusetts tribes as "the wisest Indian in the country."

NORTH CANAAN: Deriv.: See Canaan. The name is locative, from the mother town. One of the towns embraced by the Western Lands, of which in May 1726 the General Court "Proposed to the Committees of Hartford and Windsor That the whole tract of land claimed by said towns be equally divided between the government and said towns in the following manner to be done. 1. That the government have the western side thereof, and said towns to have the eastern side thereof." This gave Canaan and North Canaan to the Colony, and its authorization to be sold in New London in January 1738 was included with that of "the northwest town". (See Canaan). The first settlement was at what is now the village of Canaan in the present town of North Canaan in 1638. In December 1739, three of the settlers "are chosen a committee to agree with John Hart to fit his house convenient to meet in on the Lord's day." On April 29, 1740 it was voted "That ye town will Build a meeting Hous for ye worship of god." By 1762, "representing to this Assembly that the town is conveniently situated for two societies", petition for an ecclesiastical division was requested. This was renewed in May 1767, when it was represented "that the said town of Canaan has a large impassable mountain running from the south-east corner towards the northwest.", but it was not until October 1767 that the division was authorized. The inhabitants to the south then became the First, those to the north the Second ecclesiastical Society of the town. A civil separation became effective in 1858. (See Colebrook, Barkhamsted).

NORTH HAVEN: Deriv.: See New Haven. A part of the tract purchased in 1638 from Momauguin, Sachem, by John Davenport and Theophilus Eaton and others, its origin and early history were closely bound up with that of the mother town. The first settler was William Bradley, a reputed officer in Oliver Cromwell's army, who came about 1640 and located on the ridge west of East River and above what is now known as Cedar Hill. "The settlement" says John Warner Barber, "was very slow, and it seems that for nearly forty years some of the first planters attended public worship and buried their dead at New Haven. The women usually went on foot to New Haven, on the Lord's day, attended two long exercises, and returned. In some instances they did this with a child in their arms." On March 19, 1715, by petition of the inhabitants, New Haven gave them permission to apply to the General Court for erection as a separate parish. And in May 1716, the Assembly "allows the bounds of the parish petitioned for, according as the town of New Haven have granted." By Act of the following October "Twelve families of the town adjoining to them" were also added. An attempt to incorporate as a town in 1759 was unsuccessful. Then for some years a union with Mount Carmel Parish was considered. But a request to incorporate these two as a town was denied by the Assembly of May 1782. Town privileges were finally granted North Haven alone by Act of October 1786, and the old parish name, North Haven Society, retained.

NORTH STONINGTON: This shares with the mother town its early history and the long controversy over ownership between the Connecticut and Massachusetts Bay Colonies. Settlement in this section began about 1680. In May 1720 "upon consideration of the petition of the inhabitants dwelling in the northward part of Stonington" that a committee be appointed to "settle and establish a line that shall divide Stonington into two Societies", the line was laid by Act of May 1721. It was this ecclesiastical division that first set apart the section as an independent community and began its course toward the full town privileges that were granted it in 1708, when it retained the parish name.

Pawcatuck, the Indian name for this locality, may originally have designated the clear, open or shallow-tidal-river, or it may have come from Pequot-auke, Pequot land.

NORWALK: In 1650 "Master Roger Ludlowe of Fairfield" signed an agreement between himself "of the one parte, and Nathaniel Eli of Hartford, in the River of Connecticut,...and some others about plantinge Norwalke, over the 19th day of June." The latter promised that "they will set upon the plantinge.... with all convenient speed, will mowe, and stacke some hay upon the sayd Norwalke this winter, to the end that they may, in the spring next at the farthest, breake up some ground to plante.... and that they will begin to build and inhabite their with some considerable companie, and to invite an orthodoxe and approved minister....that the plantation shall not be taken up under thirtie approved families....and that they will not receive in any that be obnoxious to the publique good of the Commonwealth of Connecticut." The General Court of June 26, 1650, officially authorized the settlement "in substance as followeth: That the Courte could not but, in the generall, approve of the indeavors." Settlers were here by February 15, 1651, and there is a tradition that several of them spent the winter here. The Court of September 11, 1651, ordered "that Norwalke shall bee a Towne." (See Willon).

Norwalk is the old Indian name. The Indians here were called the Norwake Indians, and the Norwake River was so-called when the English first came to these shores. In the earliest town records the name was written Norwalke, the "w" probably silent, as in War (w)ick, making it 'Nor-ruck', and as late as 1865 persons then living in the town confirmed that pronunciation. The original seems to have been Algonquin, the equivalent of Nayaug, Noyack, Noyank, Nyack: a point of land. (See Willon, New Canaan).

NORWICH: Deriv.: North or Nor -wic, a Saxon name, signifying north castle or town. Settlement here was probably due to the activities of Major John Mason, the Reverend James Fitch and a group from Saybrook, who in May 1659 presented a petition to the General Court for permission to establish a settlement. The petition has been lost, but the Court records: "Hartford May 20 (59) This Court having considered the petition prsented....doe declare yt they approve and consent....to what is desired respecting Mohegin, prvided yt within ye space of three yeares they doe effect a Plantation in ye place prpounded". A formal deed of cession, signed by Uncas, Mohegan Sachem and his brother, Wawequaw, was given to the Colony on August 15, 1659. The tract was nine miles square, comprising the present towns of Norwich, Bozrah, Franklin, Lisbon, Sprague and the western border of Griswold and Preston, Jewett's City, Long Society and a part of Poquetannock (Groton).

For the first two or three years the settlement was generally known as 'the new township of Mohegan.' In the early records it is often called New-Norwich. The first use of the English name on the Colony Records was in March 1660/1, when the General Court authorizes "the Constables at Seabrook" to levy a sum "upon ye estates of such at Norridge as are defective in their rates." The first allusion to this town in England, perhaps the first public notice sent across the ocean that such a town had been established, is to be found among the answers to a series of questions respecting the condition of the Colony, sent out by the Court to the Lords of the Council of Trade. In speaking of New London and the Pequot River this document says that "A ship of 500 tunns may go up to the Towne, and come so near the shore that they may toss a biskit ashore; and vessells of about 30 tunns may pass up about 12 miles above New London, to or neer a town called Norwich."

The New Norwich appellation authenticates the honorable remembrance of the English City in Norfolk and there is an ancestral connection through Simon Huntington, a native of that city, and his wife Margaret, who came in 1633.

Mohegan was the name of the territory occupied by Uncas and his band of Mohegans at the coming of the English, appropriated to a section near the great bend of the river Thames south of Trading Cove (now the township of Montville including the villages of Uncasville and Mohegan).

The Mohegans, or Muhhekanneuk took their tribe-name from the Algonquin maingan, a wolf.

OLD LYME: Deriv.: See Lyme. To the General Court of May 10, 1663, the Deputies of Saybrook presented "their intendments to set up a plantation on the East side of the great River, and also maintayn a plantation on the West side" and the Court enlarged their "bownds fower miles on each side of the River northward". This is how settlement from Saybrook began in this locality in 1664, and Lyme, East Lyme, Old Lyme and part of East Haddam together, all came to be known as East Saybrook. On February 13, 1665, articles of agreement between the towns of Saybrook and Lyme were signed and "the inhabitants east side have Liberty to be a plantation of themselves." "Their liberty and countenance to gather into church society" was granted them in October 1678, constituting the First or "prime" Society of Lyme. The Court of May 1667 "orders yt ye Plantation on ye East side ye River over agt. Say-brooke for ye future be named Lyme"—undoubtedly from Lyme Regis in Dorset, England, a seaport town at the entrance to the English Channel on the small river Lyme. A geographical similarity may have suggested it. Michael Humphrey who came from Lyme Regis settled in Windsor.

OLD SAYBROOK: On March 19, 1632, Lord Say and Seal, Lord Brooke and others in England who had formed a Company to start a Puritan Colony in America, received from Robert, Earl of Warwick a grant to all "that part of New England in America which lies and extends itself from a River there called Narragansett . . . Forty Leagues upon a straight line . . . as the Coast lieth towards Virginia . . . & also all & singular the Lands . . . North and South . . . from the Western Ocean to the South Sea." This vast territory, which would have reached to the Pacific, came eventually to include only a territory about ten miles square—the present towns of Saybrook, Old Saybrook, Westbrook, Essex, Chester and parts of the Lymes.

In 1635, John Winthrop Jr. was commissioned "Governor of the River Connecticut" and appointed by the Company in London to act as their agent to lay out a settlement here "for gentlemen of quality." The Governor immediately dispatched a small vessell with about 20 men to take possession and erect buildings. Lieutenant Gibbons and Sergeant Willard, in charge of the expedition, arrived on the 24th of November 1635, and the building commenced with Lieutenant Lion Gardiner, an engineer appointed by the company "to serve them only in the drawing, ordering and making of a city, towns, or forts of defense", arriving—it is alledged—on November 28th. Early in the following month, a sloop which the Dutch Governor, Wouter Van Twiller, had sent from New Amsterdam, also arrived, with instructions to take possession of Kievit's Hook (Saybrook Point) and build a fort there. But the English would not permit the Dutch to land. Saybrook thus became a permanent English settlement on November 24, 1625. But the city for gentlemen of quality never materialized, in spite of the addition of others from Europe, including Colonel George Fenwick and his wife in 1639. Gardiner returned to England, and on December 5, 1644, the title to the little settlement was transferred to the Connecticut Colony. At a town meeting held in January 1648, the "outlands"—including that part on the east side of the Connecticut which later became the town of Lyme, were divided into three "quarters", or sections. (See Essex). Saybrook and Old Saybrook were divided in 1852.

Saybrook had its name before 1637, as is evidenced by a letter from Lieutenant Gardiner to John Winthrop, Jr. dated at "Saybrook, 6, Nov. 1636." It is taken from the names of its two founders, Lord Brooke and Lord Say and Seal.

Pattaquassett, the Indian name given to this locality, denotes the mouth of the Connecticut river.

Kievit's Hook was so named from the cry of a species of bird known to us as the pewit, but called by the Dutch kievit.

ORANGE: The first purchase of land here, dated February 15, 1639, rested not upon any grant from the British Crown, but upon a purchase from Ansantawae, Sachem of the Paugassett Indians, to five men from New Haven. It covered nearly all of the present towns of Orange and Milford and a part of the town of Woodbridge. The purchase was effected by the ancient English "turf and twig" ceremony, in which, after the signing of the deed, Ansantawae was handed a piece of turf and a twig. Taking the turf in one hand and the twig in the other, he thrust the twig into the turf and handed it to the English. This symbolized the making over by the Indians to the English of all the land specified in the deed with everything growing upon it. Then followed the laying down before the sachem of six coats, ten blankets, one kettle and a quantity of hoes, knives, hatchets and looking-glasses.

The section now northern Milford was surveyed and laid out for settlement in 1687. In 1688, James II fled to France, and early in 1689 William (Prince of Orange) and Mary were proclaimed in England. At this news the Bostonians threw Andros into jail, Connecticut joyfully produced her Charter, proclaimed William and Mary and sent over a petition to William III not to molest it further. The best lawyers in Great Britain pronounced Connecticut's Charter valid and Orange was subsequently so-called for the family of this monarch. The name was officially recognized by Act of the General Court of May 1822, when the two ecclesiastical Societies of North Milford and "the West Farmers in New Haven" were united to constitute a town and the honorary name retained.

Paugasset indicates a place in a river or stream where the narrows open out.

OXFORD: Deriv.: ford of the oxen, or the ford over the Ouse (Thames) river. This is largely a part of the territory originally included with that of ancient Derby obtained from the Indians by some twelve or fifteen conflicting and generally overlapping deeds. The first of these—to Wasquantuck and Rock-house hill—was made in 1678 and the last in 1710. The first permanent settlement was made in 1680, and few others followed in the vicinity of what was known as early as 1683 as "the quaker's farm". It appears from the Derby records that about 1711 much attention was directed to this place and that in 1712 a committee was authorized to lay out the land for purchase the recorder "to mark them to each man's charge"; but a general settlement did not take place until about 1733. Permission to establish an ecclesiastical Society was granted by the Court of May 1741, to be "known by the name of the parish of Oxford", and boundaries laid. Efforts to constitute the parish a town were begun in 1789, but the agreement was not confirmed by the Assembly until October 1798. The name is from Oxford the site of the famous University. (See Derby, Shelton, Southbury).

PLAINFIELD: The General Court at Hartford of June 15, 1659 records that "The Governors Worshp manifesting his desires... of a tract of Land at the head of Pocatanack Cove, to ye furtheranc of a Plantatn at Quinibauge, the Court... have answered it to ye number of 1500 Acres Uppon the Fresh River"; and, in another Act "doth hereby manifest their acceptance of the inhabitants of Quinnibaug under this Gourenmt", thus authorizing at one stroke not only the location for the settlement but its place in the Colony. Governor Winthrop made a purchase soon after from Allumps (Allups, Iemps, James) and Mashaushowit, the native proprietors of the lands now comprising Plainfield and Canterbury. In 1689 a number of persons, largely from Massachusetts, began settlements in the northern part of the tract. The Court of May 1699 granted "upon the motion of the Governr and petition of ye people of Quinibaug.... That they shall have the powers and priviledges of a township, provided it doth not preiudice any perticular persons propertye." To this was added the distinction: "That the Governrs Honr shall give the plantation a name." And in the records of October 1700, "his Honr hath named the town Plainfield."

The name is geographical, one of the first towns in America to be given an English descriptive name, and the first of a series of American 'Plainfields'.

Quinibaug denoted long pond, now in the south eastern part of Killingly, and the river which flows through that country to unite with the Shetucket near Norwich, and also gave the name to the Indian tribe living there.

PLAINVILLE: The rich lands of the Tunxis Valley attracted settlers to Farmington very early, and settlements there preceded those on the outside lands, which, being less fertile, were mapped off into divisions. These were divided again into small sections, which were allotted by vote to the settlers on condition that they would pay the taxes for a period. In this way, the level lands here fell to eighty-four proprietors, and settlement did not begin until 1737. Then a proprietors' meeting on April 5 laid out the lots, covering all of the central portion of the present town by order of the General Court of the Colony. Farmington had a claim to this territory and that covering all of Southington, New Britain, Berlin, Burlington, Avon, Plainville and parts of what are now Wolcott and Harwinton. An order of the Court of December 1, 1645 provided that "they shall have liberty to improve ten myles further south . . . and to hinder others from the like untill the court see fitt otherwise to dispose of yt."

Between 1657 and 1737, a considerable amount of land on Great Plain and "on ye plaine commonly called ye White Oak plaine" was granted out by Farmington to individuals. In 1695 a highway was laid out "twenty rods wide . . . through ye middle of ye Great Plaine in ye most accommodating place"—practically the same course as that of the present state road from Plainville to Farmington. Meetings for worship were held in private houses until the first meeting house was built in Farmington soon after 1640, and dwellers at Great Plain walked or drove until the canal was opened in 1828. About this time Lemuel Lewis and John Hamlin bought a ship's long boat in New Haven and carried passengers for three cents a head. It was known as "the meeting boat" and made the trip to Farmington in something less than an hour. The privileges of an independent Society were granted by Act of March 5, 1840, to the Second Society of Farmington. It was incorporated as a town in 1869.

PLYMOUTH: Deriv.: Plym was apparently from the Old English plum. This would be the mouth of the Plym River.

The earliest Indian deed which included this locality was probably the one dated 1657, signed after a hunting expedition had found in this locality a little north of what is now the Harwinton line, what they thought to be a mine of black lead. The deed embraced what is now the entire town of Plymouth, but no immediate settlement resulted. Instead, it was not until after the report of a "viewing" committee in 1674 that the General Court authorized the settlement at Mattatuck (Waterbury) whose early history Plymouth, with Thomaston, shares. As a community, therefor, it was first associated with its establishment as an ecclesiastical Society to which winter privileges were secured in October 1736. In October 1738, nineteen inhabitants petitioned for increased privileges, representing that they live, "the nearest seven miles and many nine or ten miles from the meeting house at Waterbury," that on the way they are obliged to cross the river "often deep and dangerous" nine times. Full privileges were granted in October 1739. The parish was named Northbury, a locative name that retained the 'bury' of the mother town, the fourth to do so in this locality. In May 1795 it was incorporated as a distinct town and named Plymouth, doubtless directly from the town of that name in Massachusetts from whence the family of Henry Cook, an early settler, and indirectly from Plymouth, port of embarkation in England.

POMFRET: Deriv.: from 'Pontefract', a Latin and French name meaning broken bridge.

The tract of land originally known as the Mashamoquet Purchase contained 15,100 acres. This was deeded by Captain James Fitch of Norwich to six persons from Roxbury, Massachusetts, and six other persons whom they might choose to be joint proprietors with them, on May 5, 1686, for thirty pounds lawful money. The purchase was confirmed by the General Assembly, with a view to its becoming a town, on July 8 of the same year. The first settler was probably Captain John Sabin, who built a house in 1696 which served as an outpost against the Indians. General settlement was slow and as late as 1713 there were probably not more than forty-five families in the town. In 1714, however, the boundary was enlarged by the addition of two farms owned by Johnathan Belcher of Roxbury, containing 2300 acres lying south of The Purchase, and called Mortlake (See Brooklyn). The settlement was known by the Indian name Massamugget until May 1713, when it was incorporated as a town and named Pomfret for the town in Yorkshire (Pontefract, pronounced 'Pomfret'), the English home of the family of Governor Saltonstall.

Mashamoquet, the name first applied to the brook that runs easterly through this town to the Quinebaug, signified at the great fishing-place and was eventually applied to the whole territory.

PORTLAND: Deriv.: Originally Port, the harbor, referring to Portland Harbour in England. Later 'land' was added.

The land here was originally owned by the Wangunks, an Algonquin tribe broken up by the Pequots. "Att a towne meeting. Ferbarry, 21st 1658, the towne of Middletown did chuse....a....committy to vewe the upland uppone the east side of the great River," and there is good reason to suppose several settlers were in this vicinity before 1700. On May 13, 1714, the General Assembly and the town of Middletown in the same year, granted the inhabitants of the east side liberty to establish themselves as the Third Ecclesiastical Society of Middletown. In 1676, when "that part of Middletown which lieth of the east side of Connectocut River" was incorporated as a town and named Chatham, (See East Hampton) Portland was included. In May 1841, Portland was incorporated as a separate town and named from the peninsular in Dorsetshire, England, which, likewise, has excellent quarries.

The Indian Wangunk means bend and was originally applied to the bend in the Connecticut River at this point.

PRESTON: Deriv.: Old English, the priests' town or fen.

Though there were probably white settlers here as early as 1648, they were certainly in residence by 1673. Settlement in general, however, was retarded by King Philip's War, and it was not until October 1686 that a petition was granted by the General Court for "liberty to erect a plantation on the east side of Norwich bounds", "if seven mile square or the quantity of it, will be a sufficiency, they may lay it out. . . . and this Court will be ready to grant them the privileged of a plantation when they shall be arived to such a capacity as to mayntayne a minister." In October 1687 "This Court named the town of the east side of Norwich, Presson." and on March 17 of that year a deed to the territory was given by Owaneco, Sachem, to "Capt. James Fitch, Capt. Josiah Standish, Thomas Parke, Sr. . . . and all the rest of the inhabitants living in New Preson." This tract was five miles in length, from Norwich to Stonington. In 1699 the settlers petitioned to become an ecclesiastical Society, but the privilege was not granted until twenty-one years later. This was Long Society, originally extending over the whole eastern border of the nine-miles square from Plainfield to Poquetannock.

The name is from Preston, a county borough in Lancashire, England, on the River Ribble near the mouth of its estuary, the ancestral home of Thomas Parke.

PROSPECT: Settlement in this section was identified with those who located in what was then the western part of Cheshire or the southeastern part of Waterbury. In January 1769, inhabitants from this locality petitioned the General Court for "priviledges some part of the year", and authority was granted them to be constituted a winter parish for the term of five months, reckoned from the first day of December to the last day of April. As was the custom, they were freed from supporting ministerial charges—or the taxes—usually paid by individuals to the several Societies to which they belonged. In 1798, Columbia Society of Cheshire was granted full parish privileges and incorporation as a town followed in May 1827, when it was named from its elevated location.

PUTNAM: Owing to the conflicting claims of Fitz-John and Wait Winthrop and Major James Fitch for the country about the estuary of the Quinebaug, settlement here was scattered until after Fitz-John Winthrop became governor in 1698. In May of the following year petition for "a regular, orderly settlement" in a ten-mile square was presented to the general Court, and this was granted, with the powers of a township. (See Killingly). In October 1715, inhabitants of the town of Kellingly were granted "leave to gather a church" and it was in this ecclesiastical Society that the life of Putnam began. Until 1849 the community was known as Pomfret Factory. Then, until its incorporation as a separate town in 1855, it was known as Quinnebaug.

The present name is in memory of Colonel Isreal Putnam. (See Plainfield).

REDDING: In 1639 a large tract of land here was bought by the proprietors of Fairfield. The unsettled portion "encirculed betwixt the townships of Fairfield, Ridgefield, Danbury and Newtown" was claimed by a small tribe of Indians whose Sachem was Chickens Warrups, a Mohawk whose home was originally in Green's Farms. The General Court of 1687 granted two hundred acres of land in the vicinity to Captain Cyprian Nichols, who settled in 1711 in the part called Lonetown. In 1714, Captain John Read, one of the ablest lawyers in New England and a chronic land speculator secured from Chickens a grant to much of this territory, legalized in a remarkable document which he drew up in the formal English fashion, making Chickens lord of the manor and himself a tenant. But Lonetown Manor, or the Manor of Chickens, did not last long, for the General Assembly of 1712 ordered it sold at auction from Fairfield, and Read secured by exchange some land for Chickens in Scattacook (Kent). The territory was not properly settled until 1722, and ecclesiastical privileges were secured in May 1729, when it was named Reading for the Colonel. An Act of May 1767, creating this an independent town changes the spelling to Redding, but the intent to honor Colonel Read is still evident.

RIDGEFIELD: On September 30, 1708, John Belden, Samuel Keelor, Matthew Seymour, Matthias St. John and other inhabitants of Norwich purchased of Catoonah Sachem and the other Indians of the Ramapoo tribe, a large tract between their town and Norwich. A committee to survey and report was appointed by the Court at New Haven of October 1710, and a patent issued in 1714. Settlement in the meantime had gone forward and a town plot laid out upon the ridge. Twenty-five families were soon in residence. In October 1733, the settlement was granted the privileges of a town and named from its location. Authority to "imbody into church estate" was granted by the Court of May 1714. Caudatowa, the Indian name for the eight-hundred foot ridge here, denotes high land.

ROCKY HILL: In December 1649, Samuel Boardman of Wethersfield in town meeting "p'pounded for the end of Rocky Hill, about half a hu'dred ac. [acres]", received 20, left his home in Wethersfield and journeyed down the shore of the Great River where, on Indian territory he built himself a house. The settlement thus begun, grew rapidly and was known in Wethersfield as "the lower community". A petition to the mother town in 1670 for the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society was granted and confirmed by the General Court of the same year, the name locally given being Lexington Society. The next year, however, this was changed to Stepney, "in as much as there is a Lexington in the Massachusetts & its not being so pleasing to some." Stepney, named perhaps from the section of eastern London north of the Thames, was the official name of the community until its incorporation as a town in 1843, when the original descriptive name was officially bestowed. As it appears on the records as such in 1649, the locality, though not then a town, is the earliest in the state to be given an English descriptive name. (See Stonington, Plainfield, Fairfield).

ROXBURY: This was the part of the Potatuck country known as Shepaug. The first settlement was made about 1713. The section was called the Upper (from Southbury) Farms, and another, probably settled about the same time, the Lower Farms. "For some twenty years" says William Cothren in his "History of Ancient Woodbury, Connecticut" "the inhabitants attended devine worship in the ancient Society. This was done both summer and winter by male and female, often on foot, the males carrying their fire-arms to protect themselves from the assualts of savage foes." Winter privileges were granted by the Court of October 1731, but it was not until May 1743 that the southern part was granted full parish privileges and named Roxbury, for the town in Suffolk County, Massachusetts. The original settlers were from Stratford and had a geneological connection with Roxbury, Massachusetts. (See Woodbury). In October 1796 Roxbury was incorporated as a town, retaining the parish name. This is the sixth -bury town in the immediate vicinity. (See Waterbury).

Shepaug is the original name for the great pond, Bantam Lake in Litchfield County. It is referred to in the early records as a river coming forth of a pond called Shippoack.

SALEM: Deriv.: Hebrew, peace. Supposed to be the original name of Jersulaem. Ps. 76, 2: "In Salem also is his tabernacle." Heb. 7, 1, 2: "King of Salem, which is King of peace."

Land in the northern part of this town was included in the grant from Owaneco to what were called the "Mohegan Hunting Grounds" covering a part of what is now Colchester. The southern portion was included in land deeded in 1669 to William Lord of Lyme. Settlement began about 1700 and went forward as parts of these other towns until 1723, when "the people living at the north end of Lyme on the north side of Eight Mile River and those living at the south end of Haddam East Society" petitioned the General Court for authority "to set up the publick worship of God among themselves". This was granted by Act of May 1725, and the parish called New Salem. The name is said to have been given by Colonel Samuel Browne, a large land owner, whose former home had been in Salem, Massachusetts. When the town was incorporated in May 1819 from Colchester, Lyme and Montville, the parish name was retained.

The native name, Paugwonk was first applied by the Indians to Fairy Lake, and may be a corruption of 'pauquun-uk', cleared land.

SALISBURY: Deriv.: from the Old English searu, armor, to which 'bury' was added. Later the first 'r' was changed to 'l' in Norman pronunciation.

Three Dutch families from the province of New York had purchased land here as early as 1720, and were the first white men in residence, Thomas Lamb from Springfield being the first from New England. The General Court of 1732 appointed a committee to lay out a town "or two, as they shall judge most proper" in the northern part of the Western Lands west of the Housatonic. The lands so surveyed, now Salisbury and Sharon, were designated in the report as 'Township M' and 'Township N.S.' In October 1737 sale of the land here was authorized by the Court from the courthouse in Hartford, and in May of the Session of 1738 this was the last of six towns to be given a name in a single Act. The name, probably selected by a committee of the Court, is undoubtedly for the cathedral town of that name in Wilts County, England, from which there was a large migration to the American colonies before 1650.

The section was originally known as Weatogue, an Indian name probably denoting wigwam-place. Weat was home, og or ock or auk, place.

SAYBROOK: After the English had torn down the Dutch arms at Saybrook and replaced them with a fool's head in 1634, the Dutch made no further attempt to seize or fortify the mouth of the Connecticut. George Fenwick, Esq., a lawyer of Gray's Inn, London, was not one of the eleven grantees named in the patent from Warwick responsible for the settlement of Saybrook, but he later became a member of the company in London, presumably buying out the interest of one or more of the original members. He arrived in New England for the first time in May or June 1636, to return "to defend the cause of freedom" at home. In July 1639, he came back to Saybrook, bringing with him his wife, Lady Alice Boteler, and as Governor he assumed control. They took up residence in the "Great Hall"—"a fair house and well fortified", which had been occupied by Lieutenant Gardner. (See Old Saybrook). "We both delight" wrote the Governor in the same year "in that primitive employment of dressing a garden."

In his "Newes from New England" Thomas Lechford, a London lawyer, who lived for a few years in Boston in the Massachusetts Bay Colony, observed in 1641 that Lady Boteler "was lately admitted of Master Hooker's Church and thereupon their child was baptised." The child was Elizabeth, born in Saybrook in 1640, and Governor Fenwick is spoken of as "a good encourager to that Church"—Thomas Hooker's, in Hartford. It was probably the death of his wife in 1648 that determined Fenwick's permanent return to England. As early as 1639, when "Mr. Governor, Mr. Deputy and Mr. Wells . . . are entreated to goe to the Rivers mouth to consult with Mr. Fenwicke about a treaty of combination wch is desi[red] againe to be on foott with the Bay" the Colonial Government at Hartford desired a union with the New Haven and Saybrook settlements. In 1643 they sent a committee to New Haven to consider the matter further, adding to the appointment that "if yt please Mr. Fenwicke to joyne with the Plantations it shall not infringe any of his priviledges wch belong to him". The fort at Saybrook, its appurtenances and the land upon the river there were sold to Connecticut Colony on December 5, 1644 for £1600.

SCOTLAND: This town was originally the southeastern section of the town of Windham, which was laid out in 1678 and where the first settlement was made in 1688. In 1700, Isaac Magoon, an inhabitant of that town, purchased several hundred acres of land east of Merrick's Brook, and a year later purchased the land on both sides of the brook, a section through which passed the road to Quinebaug (Plainfield) Plantation. A number of settlers were attracted to the locality, which Mr. Magoon named Scotland for the country of his birth, and by 1702 they had not only made provision for a school—"scollars to pay what the rate falls short"—but had laid out a green or common, and made considerable headway toward building a meeting-house. The General Court of 1701 divided Windham into two ecclesiastical Societies, of which Scotland was a part of "the South". Mansfield was set off as a separate town in May 1702. In 1727 liberty "to employ a suitable person to preach to them in the winter season;" and the privileges of an independent parish were granted by the Court of May 1732, when it was named the Third Society of Windham though still known locally as Scotland Parish. It was constituted a town by Act of May 1857, when it retained the original name, Scotland.

SEYMOUR: The territory now covered by this town was originally included in that tract purchased of the Indians on April 22, 1678 for land on both sides of the Naugatuck "at Pagasett . . . only the Indians do reserve the fishing-place at Naugatuck". The first white settler built his house southeast of Rock Rimmon about 1651, and the settlement that developed as the northern part of ancient Derby was first known as Naugatuck, later Chusettown. This was for Joseph Mauwehu, an Indian known thereabouts as Chuse. Mauwehu's tribal connection is a matter of dispute, but if he was descended from Shusumack, a Paugasuck Sachem at Stratford and the present Shelton, his nickname could be accounted for as an abbreviation, which was according to Indian custom. "Old Chuse" lived until he was twenty-one with one of the settlers of Derby. Then, about 1740, his father, Gideon Wauwehu, Sachem, gave him a tract of land near the falls of the Naugatuck River within the limits of what was later Humphreysville, and he gathered a few followers around him, built a wigwam and lived there for forty or fifty years as a petty sachem on terms of the utmost amicability with his white neighbors. He married Ann (Anna) an Indian of the East Haven tribe, who, on September 12, 1779, was admitted to full Church membership.

The reservation remained complete until 1731, when people from Derby bought all the land known as Indian Hill, the Promised Land, and east to the Woodbridge line. In 1804, the name was changed to Humphreysville in honor of General David Humphreys who had established a woolen industry at the Falls in 1803. The establishment of an ecclesiastical Society, to be known as Great Hill was permitted in May 1775. Application to be made an independent town was presented to the General Assembly of May 1850. This was to have been called Humphreys, but owing to local opposition and a tide of high political feeling, a last-minute change was made to the name of the then Governor of Connecticut, Thomas H. Seymour.

SHARON: Deriv.: Hebrew: plain. Isa. 35, 1, 2: "...the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose...the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord."

Settlement in the seven towns of the Western Lands simultaneously laid out by the General Court of May 1732, was retarded because of the contention for ownership between the Colony and the towns of Windsor and Hartford. "Township N.S."—surveyed with Salisbury by Act of May 1732—was among the towns authorized by the Court of May 1738, to be sold at auction in New Haven on the second Wednesday of the following October. Of the forty-one original purchasers, sixteen became settlers, the majority coming from Colchester and Lebanon. That they chose their own name is evidenced by the petition which they sent to the General Assembly of 1738 to incorporate as a town. This speaks of the inhabitants as "the persons who by your Honors' favor were allowed to purchase the southernmost township on the west side of the Housatonic River, which we have presumed to call by the name of Sharon." The Court Holden at New Haven permitted them "to be formed as a town and to have the privileges of other towns in this colony" but did not authorize the use of the name. In subsequent references, however, the name is applied without question. (See Barkhamsted, Canaan, Colebrook, North Canaan, Salisbury, Litchfield, Kent).

There was an Indian village in the northwest corner of the town, on a pond which the natives called Weequagnock, place at the end of, or extending to, the mountain. This was earlier called Pachquadnock, bare-mountain land. The narrow valley west of the mountain was Webotuck or Wimpeting, place at the narrow pass.

SHELTON: This town was settled as the northern part of Stratford about 1697. The General Assembly of May 1717, upon petition of "farmers inhabiting the northern parts of the town of Stratford" granted them the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society. By Act of the following October, it was named Repton Parish, probably for Repton, in Derbyshire, England, a village seven miles SSW of Derby. In 1789 the town was incorporated and named for the Honorable Samuel Huntington of Norwich, then Governor of Connecticut. On April 15, 1919 it was renamed by Act of the General Assembly to honor Edward N. Shelton, a prominent manufacturer.

SHERMAN: This town was settled with New Fairfield, and the first settlers who came about 1736, established themselves as a part of that town. In May 1742, New Fairfield was divided into two ecclesiastical Societies, of which the northern was to become the separate town of Sherman, so incorporated in October 1802, when it was named for Roger Sherman.

SIMSBURY: The tribunal territory of the Massacoes then extended over all of what is now Simsbury, parts of Granby, East Granby, Barkhamsted and Canton. Pitch and tar were articles in great demand both at home and abroad by the British navy, and the Connecticut Colonists were quick to take advantage of such an opportunity for industry and trade. At the Court at Hartford of May 19, 1663, "John Griffen [of Windsor] having made appeare to this Court that he was the first [in] the art of making pitch and tarre in these parts, [the Court] doe order that the Griffen shall have two hundred acres of lands (where he can find them) between Massacoh [Simsbury] and Warranoake."

By 1666 a committee appointed by the Court of 1663 had obtained a long list of subscribers' names, and laid out there lots beginning at Nod Meadow (See Avon) and going northerly along the valley to Hop Meadow. By 1670, a settlement grown up in the parts of Windsor known as Weatogue, Hop Meadow, Terry's Plain and The Falls petitioned for town privileges, which the Court of May 12 of that year granted, stating that "Massacoe's bownds shall runn from Farmington bownds to the northward tenn miles and from Windsor bownds on the east to run westward tenn miles." It adds that the plantation at Massaco "shall be called Simmsbury", perhaps from Symondsburry—pronounced Simsbury—Parish in Dorset from which there were American colonists very early.

The first mention of the disposal of lands at Massacoe occurs in the records of the General Court of April 1742, when "Its Ordered, that the Govrnor and Mr. Heynes shall have liberty to dispose of the ground uppon that prte of Tunxis River cauled Mossocowe, to such inhabitants of Wyndsor as they shall see cause."

Hop, a word which occurs over and over among Connecticut place-names, is undoubtedly from the Indian hashobp (pronounced has-hop), and was used by them to denote a species of wild hemp which grew all along the banks of the rivers and brooks.

SOMERS: The locality here was settled as the southeast part of Agawam (ancient Springfield) by Massachusetts, and granted out by the General Court of that Colony to Major John Pynchon and his company. It was a part of the land sold with Enfield to the white men by Totaps in 1688, was incorporated with that town, and was of the same ecclesiastical Society in part until about 1726, when the Massachusetts General Court constituted it a distinct Society by the name of East-Enfield. The town of Enfield, with Somers, at that time extended from the Connecticut River to Safford, ten miles. Massachusetts constituted it a town in 1734, by the name of Somers. Dr. Benjamin Trumbull is the authority for the statement that it was thus named at the request of Governor Belcher of Massachusetts in honor of John Somers, the Lord Chancellor of England, for whom he had a particular friendship and veneration.

Somers was one of the towns affected by the controversy over the boundary line between Massachusetts and Connecticut, the complaint of those towns handed over to Massachusetts by the boundaries of both 1642 and 1713, being that they had "been and still are deprived of their rights and privileges to which they are justly entitled by the [Connecticut] charter, and thereupon complain they are aggrieved." "The longer they continued under the government of Massachusetts and were denied the privileges of the people of Connecticut" says Dr. Trumbull, "the more uneasy they were." A settlement having been reached by Act of the General Court of May 1749, the town of Somers, with Woodstock, Enfield and Suffield were admitted to the Connecticut Colony. Ecclesiastical privileges were granted in May 1753. (See Thompson).

SOUTHBURY: On March 17, 1685/6 a tract of land covering what is now a large part of Roxbury, Oxford and Southbury and known as the Shepaug Purchase was bought from the Potatuck Indians by proprietors from Stratford moving north to establish Woodbury and the surrounding towns. The Oxford section was called kitel-town because, it is said, it was paid for with a brass kettle. The Assembly of May 1731 divided Woodbury into distinct ecclesiastical Societies, defined their boundaries and constituted and named the more southerly, Southbury, the fifth of the -bury's in this section. It was made a town by Act of 1787, retaining the parish name. (See Waterbury).

Potatuck (Powntuckkuck), the Indian name for all this territory, taken from the name of the tribe, denotes the country about the falls. The later English descriptive names, Waterbury, Watertown, Brookfield and Bridgewater would stem from a similar observation of the physical characteristics of the area.

SOUTHINGTON: Originally included within the southern limits of Farmington, the land here was laid out into lots and divided among eighty-four proprietors of that town in 1722. Several persons had already taken up residence here as early as 1696. Samuel Woodruff built at Pudding Hill two years later and others followed. For the first twenty years and more all the families attended public worship in Farmington, a distance, for some of them, of eleven miles. By 1721 the farmers living in the section known as Panthorn decided to appeal to the General Court for winter privileges, and the desirability of "theyer having of mr. Buck to preach among us this winter season." This was granted "by voat", and also a measure "to abate ye sd ffarmers one third part of each of theyer proportions toward" the payment of their taxes for the support of the prime Society. By the next year they added to the petition that they might become "A ministerial Society amongst themselves". To this the Farmington Society objected "considering ye weekness and Inability of ye sd ffarmers at ye present", but adding "yett are we very willing to give them all Reasonable Encouragement so soon as they are able." But finally "ye answer thereunto was for ye affirmative by a clear major vote", although certain requirements were made. Petition to the General Assembly followed and was allowed by Act of May 14, 1724. The parish was known as Panthorn Society. In October 1779, this was incorporated as a town, retaining the geographical name that had grown up in the later years of the parish, from its location South-(of Farm)-ington.

SOUTH WINDSOR: Deriv.: See Windsor. The origin and very early history of this town is in common with that of ancient Windsor and its later life follows particularly that of East Windsor. Settlement was retarded until about 1676, after King Philip's War. In May 1692, the General Assembly granted the petition of inhabitants of Windsor to procure two ministers, "the one to be for . . . those on the east side of Conecticut River." In 1694, an ecclesiastical division of the town was authorized. In May 1696, the privileges of an independent Society to be known as the Second Society of Windsor were granted. Residents in the south part of this district, the section known as Wapping, applied very early to the Second Church for winter privileges, though it was not until 1761 when they "numbered two hundred souls and had thirty-two houses" that the General Assembly granted this; and it is in this church union that the town had its beginning. It was incorporated as the town of South Windsor in 1845.

There is a Wapping Street in London.

SPRAGUE: The two towns in whose origin and very early history Sprague is embodied are Franklin to the west and Lisbon to the east. Probably settled by 1700, this was a part of the less thickly settled territory within the limits of that included in the request to be established as the ecclesiastical Society called Hanover. This was petitioned for in 1760, not granted until May 1761. Then, in July 1856 William Sprague of Cranston, Rhode Island, a textile manufacturer, purchased three hundred acres on the Shetucket and laid the foundation of a great cotton mill. Baltic village sprang into existence. This is one of the few towns to have had its identity established by the concerns of industry rather than those of an ecclesiastical nature. In 1861 the new town was incorporated and named for its founder.

Baltic, named as the cotton trade became extensive, is probably from the seaport of Russia in Esthonia near the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, the terminus of the Baltic River.

STAFFORD: Deriv.: ford which needs a staff.

This town, authorized by the General Assembly of 1718 may be said to have fostered Connecticut's State House. That Court enacted "That a town be forthwith, or as soon as may be, laid out, of the contents of seven mile square, to be laid out eastward of Enfield." It also provided that there be allotments for 50 families with some land reserved "for pious uses". A committee was "to arrange that the town be laid out by some artist". In October 1718, the General Assembly provided that the monies received from the sale of this town be put into the hands of a committee to provide for the building of a State House at Hartford.

Stafford was settled in 1719 by John Pasco from Enfield, Josiah Standish from Preston, Benjamin Rockwell from Windsor and others from Massachusetts and elsewhere. It was granted the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society in May 1723. Its name is authorized by embodiment of the order of the Court of 1718 to the commissioners "for the selling of the land of the plantation or new town, called Stafford." The name is from Stafford, city and shire in England, one of the great manufacturing counties.

STAMFORD: Deriv.: rocky or stony ford.

All this territory, known to the white men by the Indian name Rippowam or Rippowams, denoting Mill River and the territory on both sides, was purchased by Captain Nathaniel Turner, agent for New Haven in 1640. Ponus, Sagamore of Toquamshe and Was-cusse, Sagamore of Shippan gave up their claims for 12 coats, 12 hoes, 12 hatchets, 12 knives, 2 kettles and 4 fathom of white wampum. The whole or a large part of this tract was then purchased of New Haven by some of the inhabitants of Wethersfield for thirty pounds sterling, the purchasers agreeing to join the New Haven Colony. Twenty men agreed to settle here by the last of November 1641, but before the end of the year, there were thirty or forty families. The town was admitted to the jurisdiction of Connecticut by Act of the General Court of October 9, 1662: "This Court doth hereby declare their acceptanc of ye Plantations of Stanford and Greenwich undr this Government." The name is commonly spelled Stanford or Stanforde in the early records, although the pronunciation has always been Stamford, like that of the city of churches in Lincolnshire, England, the one of the three English Stanfords for which it would seem to have been named.

STERLING: This town originally was the northern part of Voluntown settlement begun about 1710 by persons from Plainfield.

The inconveniences arising from the length and narrowness in shape of ancient Voluntown soon became so manifest that a proposition on April 25, 1793 to divide the town met with immediate acceptance. A committee representing both sections was appointed to act as agents to the General Assembly, which passed an Act in May 1794, incorporating the new town "by the name of Sterling". It is said to have been named for Dr. John Sterling, a temporary resident. Ekonk was the Indian name of this locality, a Mohican word for the long hill or ridge in the town.

STONINGTON: The territory included within the boundaries of the original town was covered by the first Patent of Connecticut granted by Robert, Earl of Warwick in 1631 to William, Viscount Say and Seal, Lord Brooke and others, (See Old Saybrook) and involved in the long dispute between Massachusetts and Connecticut Colonies as to ownership.

In 1649, William Cheseborough, a resident of Seacunck (Rehoboth, Massachusetts) and a friend of John Winthrop, built a house in the section known as Wequetequock, which he believed to be a part of Massachusetts Bay Colony. The settlement grew, and by 1654 was large enough to feel warranted to claim corporate powers which were requested of the Connecticut General Court. But the request was denied even for the privileges of an independent parish.

Two years later the settlers appealed again with the same result. Then an appeal was sent to the Massachusetts Court, complaining that, while denying these privileges, the Court of "Connectycoat . . . answered that thease parts did belong to them" and that "Whereas youre pore Petitioners . . . are bould still to petition that you please to confarme our lands and Possessions & to grant us the liberty of a Township & the privyldges thereof & likewise Charrytably to Consider our remoatness as also being surrounded by many indijans & many malignant persons often passing this way as quakers and others." This, too, was denied, but it was decided that the whole matter of ownership be referred to the Commissioners of the Colonies. In 1658 they handed down a decision that all the Pequot territory west of Mystic River belonged to Connecticut, and all to the east, including the present Stonington, North Stonington and a part of Westerly, to Massachusetts. The affairs of the community, in the meantime, were ordered by the "Asotiation of Poquatuck peple", organized on June 30, 1658, at the suggestion of the Massachusetts Court of 1656.

The first name the community had been given was Mystic, applied to that section lying between Mystic River on the west and Stony Brook on the east. But on October 19, 1658, the Session of the Court at Boston "judgeth it meet to grant that the English plantation between Mystic and Pawcatuck be called Southertown", and its boundaries were extended into the country eight miles north from the mouth of Mystic River. The town then continued as a part of the Massachusetts Bay Colony until the Connecticut Charter of April 22, 1662 fixed the eastern boundary at Pawcatuck River, placing a large part of Southertown under the jurisdiction of Connecticut and leaving the part east of the river under the control of Rhode Island. Southertown was not represented in the General Court of Connecticut until October 1664. The Court of May 13, 1669 granted that they might "settle themselves in a Church order", and a patent was granted in 1716. The Court of October 12, 1665, decreed: "Southerton is by this Court named Mistick in memory of that victory God was pleased to give this people of Conecticut ouer the Pequot Indians." Yet by May of 1666: "The Towne of Mistick is by this Court named Stonington" probably from descriptive and Stoney River associations.

Wequetequock: at the head of a tidal river, originally designated the cove about halfway from the present Stonington borough to Pawcatuck River. Pawcatuck: probably from pauqua, clear, open; tuk, tidal river.

STRATFORD: Deriv.: ford by which a Roman road crossed a river. All the English "Stratfords" are on rivers.

The town records for the first ten years of its history have been lost. Its first official mention is in the Records of the General Court at Hartford for 1656, when "This Court, at the request of Stratford, do grant that their bounds shall be 12 myle northward by Pauguissitt River". Actual settlement, it is certain, had been started in the spring of 1639 by planters from England, Roxbury, Boston and Concord, Massachusetts, Wethersfield and Milford within the Colony. An order of the Court of June 9, 1640 that "Mr. Haynes, Mr. Ludlow and Mr. Welles settle the boundaries in that locality and tender the Oath of Fidelity to the Inhabitants of said towns," is its only official authentication as a "towne". The name is from Stratford-upon-Avon, the home in Warwickshire, England, of the Curtis family.

The Indian Cupheag denotes a harbor, or place shut in.

SUFFIELD: Deriv.: southern feld, field. (See Enfield).

By the line run in 1642 by Massachusetts between that Colony and Connecticut (See Enfield) the land here belonged to the Province of Massachusetts Bay. In 1660 the General Court of that Colony granted to 6 persons land "by ye name of Stoney River on both sides of the way to Connecticott, 7 miles square. On May 20, 1674, the committee for settling the town (an arrangement common in Massachusetts) petitioned "that the name of the place may be Suffield [a change of spelling only, as Southfield, as it was already known, was always pronounced Suffield], it being the southernmost town that either at present is, or like to be in that Countrey, and neere adjoining to the south border of our Patent in those parts." The petition was granted by the Massachusetts Court on June 3, 1674. It was incorporated as a town in March 1682 and until 1740 constituted one religious Society, with its ecclesiastical, civil and political affairs inseparably blended.

One of the towns actively concerned when the joint re-running of the line between the states in 1713 (See Somers) put her within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, Suffield, at a town meeting held on March, 1723/4 "by a clear vote made choice of John Kent to be their agent in and for the procuring for ye said town, the privileges of Connecticut Government." On March 20, 1747, it voted to unite with Woodstock, Somers and Enfield to apply both to the Massachusetts Court and the General Assembly at Connecticut to become part of Connecticut. The Assembly at Hartford of May 1749, establishing that the inhabitants of these towns had been deprived of their Charter rights, that the agreement "was made through mistake, and that this government . . . received no equivalent for the jurisdiction over those towns, nor was [it] ever established by the royal confirmation . . . therefor . . . must be looked upon as null and void." The four towns were admitted to Connecticut Colony by the same Act and in May 1753, granted the privileges of Connecticut ecclesiastical Societies.

THOMASTON: The first settler here was Henry Cook, who came in 1728. With Plymouth, Thomaston was a part of that section north of Waterbury to petition for parish privileges, which were granted by Act of the General Assembly of October 1739, and named Norbury Parish. When Plymouth was set off as a separate town in 1795, this section, known as Plymouth Hollow was again included. The factory which made the world-wide known Seth Thomas (1785-1859) clocks, was established here in 1812 and the village began to be known as Thomas Town. One of the youngest of the Connecticut towns, that name was confirmed with its incorporation as a town in 1875.

THOMPSON: In 1642 the Massachusetts Colony authorized Nathaniel Woodward and Solomon Saffery, two "skillful and approved artists", to run her southern boundary line, and the line so run placed the land now included in Thompson and Woodstock among those within the limits of that Colony. This line was adhered to, in spite of the protests of Connecticut, for seventy years.

When the planters of New Roxbury (See Woodstock) petitioned the Court of Massachusetts for the right to establish that settlement in 1683, the request was granted on condition that certain gentlemen of Roxbury in Massachusetts already granted an eight-mile square in the Nipmuck Country "have the first choice". They chose the section called Quinnatissett, and the two largest land-owners subsequently became non-resident Englishmen, one of whom was the Major Robert Thompson from whom the town later was to take its name. In 1684 this was laid out to farms and then left for thirty years. By 1711 there were a few scattered dwellings. In 1713, when the dispute about the Massachusetts line was settled, it was found that Connecticut could claim most of the land here, and in 1714 "Josiah Wolcott, in his own name and in the name of Major Robert Thompson and other proprietors of the greatest part of the land lying in the northeast of Connecticut, east of Woodstock, north of Killingly" petitioned for the privileges of a town. While the non-residents owners desired incorporation as a distinct town, the residents themselves manifested a strong inclination to unite with Killingly, and in 1726 over thirty families settled on the territory adjoining this town. In May 1728, when Thompson Society was incorporated, it was also known as Kellingly North Society. When incorporation as a town was granted in 1785, the name Thompson,—a memorial to the early owner—was retained.

Quinnatissett, a word used by the Nipmuck Indians to denote an Indian village on Thompson Hill.

TOLLAND: Deriv.: Tan-land, land on River Tone.

The origin of this town is closely associated with that of Coventry, both being a part of that tract laid claim to by "several . . . gentlemen in and about Hartford" . . . by virtue of the last will of Joshua Uncas, Sachem of the Mohegans. (See Mansfield, Hebron). The General Court of May 1715 released all claim of the Colony to this land, provided that "the said claimers" should first lay out the bounds for the town of Coventry according to the original grant of a township, viz. 6 miles square, pay in to the Colony treasury £60, and fulfill one or two other conditions relating to settlers already in residence. With all this accomplished, they were to have another township of six miles square laid out to them, "which shall be called Tolland, bounded on the south with Coventry, and east with Willamantuck River." Authority to "imbody into church estate" was granted by Act of May 1722, with full town privileges. The name is taken from the English Tolland in Somersetshire.

TORRINGTON: Deriv.: Identical with Terrington, the tun of Tira's people. The land here was a part of that granted to Hartford and Windsor in the Division of the Western Lands (See Barkhamsted, Colebrook, North Canaan) of May 1726. In the further division (of February 1732) the land now included in Torrington, Colebrook, Barkhamsted and the western half of Harwinton was given to Windsor. The Legislature of May 1732, not only gave the name to this section, it authorized that the Windsor company was to divide its lands at the rate of one acre to the English pound on the tax list for that year of every proprietor, of whom there were one hundred and thirty-six. Settlement here was slow, town privileges not being granted until October 1740. It was a frontier town. In October 1744, a vote of town meeting appropriated thirty-five pounds six shillings and sixpence as one-half the cost of building a fort to be used as a protection from the Mohawks. A Congregational Society was organized on October 21, 1741.

The name is from Torrington in Devonshire, England, on the Torridge, early home of the Parsons family. Torrington was the name of the second ecclesiastical Society, incorporated in October 1763, a name often used to denote all the Torrington area.

TRUMBULL: Settled about 1690 as the part of Stratford later known as Nichols' Farms, this section "praying for village privileges" was granted that liberty by the General Assembly of October 1725, and its boundaries laid "to be distinct from the town of Stratford and from the villages of Stratfield and Repton." (See Shelton). It was petitioned that the village "be called by the name Unity", and this also was granted. "There was a church gathered and settled at Unity" on November 18, 1730, and in October 1744 the neighboring parish of Long Hill petitioned for permission to join with Unity for winter privileges and the two were united under the name of North Stratford. In October 1797, however, when incorporation as a town was granted, the present name was adopted, for the Honorable Jonathan Trumbull of Lebanon, then Governor of Connecticut. This was the son of the Connecticut governor to whom George Washington referred as "my brother Jonathan", "I can always depend upon Brother Jonathan," an allusion to the classical devotion of David to Jonathan: II Samuel, 25-6-7: "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful".

UNION: The first white man to own land in this town was Captain Thomas Clarke of Boston, to whom a large section was made over by the General Court of Massachusetts in 1657, as a reward for public services. It was considered valuable because of the black lead or graphite deposits, specimens of which had been given John Oldham in 1633 by the Indians. (See Wethersfield). The Captain and his heirs worked their mine for a considerable time. In 1727, William McNall, John Lawson and James Shearer first settled here. Long before its settlement it was known as the Union Land, sometimes as the Union Right, perhaps from its creation from different sections that were left over when the boundaries of the surrounding towns were run. On its western border there were 1800 acres called from earliest times, The Land of Content. This was sold by a committee of the General Court of May 1719, empowered to "sell certain lands for the encouraging of Yale College". On July 1, 1720, the entire section was sold to 10 proprietors from Windsor for £307, which was donated to Yale College, (moved about this time from Saybrook to New Haven) with the qualification that "the 5th part of all the ore of silver and gold that may...be...gotten in sd. tract...is hereby saved for our sovereign the king." A meeting to organize "the proprietary of the Union right" was held in the house of William Ward of Ashford on December 26, 1729, and under date of October 10, 1734, the inhabitants "lying in the northerly corner of this government" petitioned for town privileges, which were granted, and the new town given its traditional name.

Mashopaug, great water, was the Indian name applied to this locality. Paug (pog, poag, bog, boag, baug, chaug) is a generic word, meaning standing water. The prefix masha (massa) signifies large or great, as Massachusetts signifies great hill.

VERNON: On September 9, 1672, Joseph Drake, Corp. Samuel Marshall and Jacob Drake, by appointment of the town of Windsor, moved the General Court that some enlargement be granted that town "on the East side the River of Connecticut, [then a part of Windsor], they having an eye that in convenient time it will be fit for a plantation." The Court then granted to Windsor an extension of territory eastward five miles from the former bounds. The Court of May 1718, authorized the settlement of this tract and appointed a committee for its laying-out. The district was settled from East Windsor, Samuel Grant being the first resident. In 1749, winter privileges were granted to eighteen residents of North Bolton, and the civil and ecclesiastical history of Vernon properly begins with that town. In 1760, persons in north Bolton and the east part of the Second Society of Windsor applied to the General Court for the privileges of ecclesiastical independence. This was granted, and the parish given the name, North Bolton Society. They then applied to the County Court for a committee to "Affix a place to build a meeting house." The site still known as Old Meeting House Hill was chosen and the first building raised on May 6, 1762. When the town was incorporated in October 1808, and named for Admiral Edward Vernon, church and Society—reversing the customary procedure—took the name of the town.

"Due to conflicting commercial interests in the Carribbean", on June 15, 1739, England declared war on Spain—popularly known as "the War of Jenkin's Ear". Admiral Edward Vernon sailed from Portsmouth, England, on July 23, 1739 at the head of a British armada instructed to "destroy the Spanish settlements in the West Indies and to distress their shipping by any method whatever." Two companies, or 1000 men, was Connecticut's part in the New England quota of Colonial reinforcements, of whom a bare three hundred returned, for the squadron was badly defeated at Cartagena April 9-10-11, 1741. This was known as the Vernon Expedition and the choice of name undoubtedly stems from a memorial to the heroism of Vernon and the Connecticut men.

VOLUNTOWN: "From the first settlement of the colony" says Dr. Trumbull, "it had been customary to make grants of land to officers, soldiers and others who had been especially serviceable to the colony." Such grants had been made after the Pequot War, (See East Lyme) and those who had volunteered for the war with the Narragansetts accordingly petitioned the General Court of October 1696 for the grant of a new township as an acknowledgement of their services. A tract six miles square was accordingly granted them, and the Court of 1700—"some of the said volunteers having been out upon the discovery, and having pitcht upon a tract of land" laid out the boundaries proposed by them embracing the present Voluntown. The Court of May 1708 granted "upon the desire of the volunteers... that the plantation formerly given to them shall be called Volluntown"... from Volun (teers) town. Parish privileges were granted on October 10, 1723.

WALLINGFORD: The Old British was Guallden, old fort, and the Saxons added ford to it, making Gualldenforde, the crossing by the old fort. From that it became Wallengaforde.

The site of this town was included in the second purchase of land from the Indians made in December 1638 by Governor Eaton, John Davenport and other gentlemen from New Haven. The settlement was projected in 1669. A committee vested with powers to manage the whole matter of the settlement—an arrangement more common to Massachusetts than Connecticut—was appointed by the town of New Haven to act as trustee until May 1672. The General Court of October 1667 granted the permission "to the towne of New Haven. . . . to make a village on the east River, if they see it capable for such a thing, provided they settle. . . . there within fower yeares from May next." The settlers located the village on the hill on the east side of the plain. They called the village East Haven Village and the latter New Haven plain until 1670, when, by Act of May 12 the Court "orders that the plantation on the playne in the Road to New Haven, be called Wallingford." "Liberty to gather themselves into church fellowship" was granted in May 1675. The name was restricted to that section extending southward from the point where "the old road to New Haven goeth over Pilgrom's Harbor [See Meriden] ten miles and to extend five miles each side of the Quinnipiac."

The name is taken from the town in Berkshire, England. The Indian name, Coginchauge, means long swamp.

WARREN: This town was settled about 1737, as the eastern part of Kent. Inhabitants here petitioned the General Court of May 1750 for the privileges of an ecclesiastical Society. These were granted and the Society named East Greenwich. In 1786, however, when town privileges were requested, it was named in honor of General Joseph Warren, a hero of the Revolution who lost his life at Bunker Hill.

Weramaug's Reserve: Weramaug was the name by which "the sachem of Weantinock", who lived near the Great Falls of the Housatonic, was known to the English. The original Indian name was Wonkemaug, a crooked fishing place. The sachem may have taken his name from his place of residence; a transference of place-names to persons was very common. (See Litchfield).

WASHINGTON: The first settlement was made in what is now Washington in 1734 by Joseph Hurlbut. Five years later the inhabitants here had become more numerous, and 20 persons petitioned for winter privileges, as their wives and children had "to tarry at home from the worship of God about half the year." This was granted. In October 1741 full parish privileges were attained and the Society named Judeah. A second Society, gathered in October 1753 from the towns of New Milford, Kent and "a place called Merry-all" was incorporated and named New Preston. At a special session of the General Assembly of January 7, 1779, the town composed of these two Societies, was created and appropriately named for the first president, it being the first town in Connecticut to be incorporated after the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

WATERBURY: "In consequence" says John Warner Barber in his "Historical Collections of Connecticut", "of the favorable reports relative to the interval lands bordering upon the river of Naugatuck, in this vicinity, a number of the inhabitants of Farmington, in the autumn of 1673, petitioned the Assembly for a committee to view Mattatuck (the aboriginal name of Waterbury) and report upon the expediency of locating a plantation at that place." A committee reported favorably to the Assembly of the following spring, adding that they having been "to view Matitacoocke in reference to plantation, doe judge it capable of the same" and that their "apprehensions are that it may accommodate thirty families." A committee of five, appointed to manage and order the affairs of the new settlement, promptly laid down an agreement of eight articles, dated May 30, 1674 and covering the terms of settlement: Every person to have eight acres for a home lot, he to build a "good and fashionable dwelling house 18 by 16, and 9 feet between joints with a good chimney," and so on.

In May 1686, the General Assembly voted that the name of the growing community "shall be for the futer Watterbury", doubtless from its proximity to the Naugatuck, Fulling-Mill River (called by the Indians Sqontk), Great and Little Brooks. It was the first of the "-bury" parishes and towns in this section—bury as the end of a place-name is common in England. (See Danbury, Watertown, Plymouth, Southbury, Roxbury, Brookfield, Woodbury, Wolcott, Middlebury).

Mattatuck, the Indian descriptive, referred to another natural aspect, Matuhtugk-ohke, a place without trees.

WATERFORD: This area was settled as a part of New London about 1653. In 1801, all that part of the New London settlement lying roughly outside what are now the immediate city limits, presented a petition to the General Court for the privileges of ecclesiastical and town separation. The petition was presented, says Miss Caulkins, by Isaac Rogers "in behalf of the inhabitants of the withdrawing portion of the town, and the only reason assigned was the inconvenience to which many were subjected, by their distance from the town-plot, where the public meetings were held. The separation was amicable and mutually satisfactory." The name, said to have been suggested by Rogers, had an evident reference to its situation on the Sound and Niantic Cove, with a fordable stream, the Jordan, running through it. This stream was first identified in "The Book of Lawes", record of December 14, 1663, when "George Chapple hath given . . . six acres of land for a house-lot betwixt the neck fence and Jordan river, part of it buting on Jordan river." Jordan river is Biblical, II Kings: 5, 10.

WATERTOWN: Settled about 1701 as a part of Waterbury, inhabitants "of the northwest quarter of the bounds of the said Waterbury" petitioned to the General Assembly of 1737 for the powers of an independent parish. The first report of the committee set up to "view the circumstances" not being accepted, a second, of May 1738, reported favorably to the October Assembly of that year, and full ecclesiastical privileges were granted, the Society "to be called and known by the name of Westberry," the third -bury in this section. (See Waterbury). In 1780, when incorporation as a town was asked for, the name Watertown was preferred.

WESTBROOK: From West-(Say)-brook. First settled about 1664, as a part of ancient Saybrook, "the western inhabitants" of that town petitioned the General Assembly of May 1724 for the privileges of an independent Society. This was granted and known as Waterbury West Society. In October 1725, liberty was granted them "to imbody into church estate and to call and settle an orthodox minister amongst them." The community was known by the Indian name Pochaug until 1810, when it was named Westbrook. Incorporation as a town did not come until 1840.

Pochaug, probably from pahshaug, originally denoting the place where Pachaug and Menunkateset rivers divide in two.

WEST HARTFORD: Deriv.: See Hartford. Following the original settlement of Newtowne (Hartford), this section was first settled as a part of that town. To the General Court of October 1710, David Ensigne, John Watson, Samuel Sedgwick and others, inhabitants of the town of Hartford dwelling "on the westernmost furlong or range of lots in that town, commonly called the West Division, presented a petition...for liberty to be granted to them to call and settle a minister of the gospel...amongst them.... Upon consideration whereof this Assembly do....appoint a committee....to treat with the inhabitants of the town of Hartford.... and endeavor to bring them to a willingness and consent thereunto." Upon a favorable report of this committee, the Court of May 1711, "do now grant to the said farmers the liberty and privileges of being one intire parish and society by and of themselves within the said town of Hartford." West Hartford became a separate town in 1854.

WEST HAVEN: Deriv.: See New Haven. In May 1715, the power to establish "a separate Society to carry on the worship of God amongst themselves" first identified West Haven as a community distinct from the mother town, though the first settlement, from New Haven dates from 1648. Identified for a time with the town of Orange, West Haven was incorporated as a distinct town in 1921.

WESTON: In October 1756, the General Court appointed a committee to "view the circumstances" of petitioners from the northern part of Green's Farms parish, the northwestern part of Greenfield parish in Fairfield and "a small part of the parish of Wilton in Norwalk bounds" to be made an independent parish. Their petition was granted in May 1757, and boundaries laid, under the name of Norfield Society, presumably for its location on the north-west corner of Fairfield. However, the town, incorporated in 1787, took its locative name from its north-west relation to the mother town. As its geographical relation northwardly of the mother town was emphasized in the parish name, the change to Weston would seem to indicate a possible throw-back to Weston, Massachusetts on the Old Connecticut path connecting the settlements of the early colonies, especially as the town of Easton was not set off until 1845.

WESTPORT: At a particular court held at Fairfield on October 10, 1648, it was "agreed that Thomas Newton, Henry Gray & John Green shall have liberty to sit down & inhabit at Machamux", a section purchased from the Indians of that name and stretching from Frost Point an English mile along the seacoast toward Compaw, and six or seven miles inland. The Indians lived on an elevated bank east of this strip. Daniel Frost of Fairfield and Francis Andrews of Hartford were later chosen to join this enterprise, each of the five being allowed a two-acre home lot. The name Maxumux soon gave way to Bankside, and the proprietors for several years were "The Five Bankside Farmers". In March 1657/8 the General Court allowed certain others to join those already at Bankside—"a place betwene Fairfield Towne & Norwalke", and a general settlement here was approved by the Court of May 9, 1667. Parish privileges were permitted by the Court of October 1714.

Compo: "About two and a half miles south of the village of Westport is a smooth and beautiful section called Compo."—Barber.

Machamux is likely from Mahachemo's, the name of a Norwich Indian. The present name is descriptive. (See Wilton).

WETHERSFIELD: Deriv.: from a name, Wihthere's feld, field. "When our fathers removed from Massachusetts to Connecticut" says Henry Stiles, in his "History of Ancient Wethersfield, Connecticut"—"they were careful to obtain the sanction of the General Court of the Bay Colony. This was not granted as soon as desired, and in the summer of 1634 some of the inhabitants of Watertown, impatient of delay [See Hartford] and led by Mr. John Oldham removed to Connecticut, and built their . . . houses at Wethersfield (Pyquag) which they called Watertown after the town from which they emigrated." On May 6, 1635, the Massachusetts General Court ordered "There is liberty granted to the inhabitants of Watertown to remove themselves to any place they shall think meet to make choice, provided they continue still under this government." Six members of the Watertown Puritan Church were likewise dismissed "with intent to form anew in a church covenant in the River of Connecticut." "Winthrop's Journal", record of September 4, 1633, states that "John Oldham and three with him went overland to Connecticut to trade," and it is probable that their report largely influenced the location of the first settlement in Connecticut by white men. The Indian name was apparently dropped in 1635. The "General Corte of 1^o 7^{br} 1636" was held "att Watertowne", but the "Cort at Hartford of 5th Apr. 1638" speaks of a "difference betweene Soheage, an Indian the Sachem of Pyquaagg now called Wythersfeild". And the "Courte of 21 Feb. 1636/7" adds to the Act authorizing the naming of Hartford: "the plantacon now called Watertowne shalbe called & named Wythersfeild."

There were settlers from Wethersfield parish in Essex County, England in Massachusetts very early, but the proof that any of them influenced the name of the Connecticut town or migrated to it, is lacking, though Hooker and many of his followers came from nearby. While the birthplace and home of Thomas Hooker in England is a matter of dispute William Hubbard who could remember the migration from Massachusetts says that Mr. Hooker "was ordained pastor over a company at New Town, that came over with him from about Earl (Earl's) Colne in Essex." Wethersfield is a nearby parish in Essex County. (See Hartford, Windsor).

WILLINGTON: Deriv.: from Willington, town among the willows. Although a few families had settled here before that time, the General Court of May 1720, granted to eight persons from Windsor, Derby, Fairfield, Milford and Hartford, "being all of this Colony, one certain piece.... of land, bounded south on Mansfield bounds west upon Willamantuck River, north upon Stafford, east upon Ashford.... about sixteen thousand acres" for £510 in current money and issued them a patent. "The settlers" says John Warner Barber "were from various parts of New England, and they moved on to the land one after the other in a very scattering manner." The settlement was created a town by Act of May 1727, when it was to be "known by the name of Willington". Spelled Wellington in the Records of May 1725, the name is from the English town of Wellington in Somersetshire, from which the Duke of Wellington was later to derive his title. There is an English Willington in Durham shire but comparatively few settlers came from so far north.

WILTON: Deriv.: town among the willows. With Norwalk, New Canaan and a part of Westport, this town was included in the original grants of land from the Norwalk Indians in 1640. The first of these was "An agreement made between the Indians of Norwalke and Roger Ludlow. It is agreed that the Indians.... for and in consideration of eight fathom of wampum, sixe coates, tenn hatchets, tenn hose, tenn knives, ten sissors, ten jewse-harpes, ten fathom Tobackoe, three kettles of sixe hands about, tenn looking-glasses, have granted all the land.... and grounds betweene the twoe Rivers, the one called Norwalke, the other Soakatuck, to the middle of sayd Rivers, from the sea a days walke into the country."

The date of the first settlement was about 1701, though Captain Daniel Patrick had bought "the middle part of the town", and there were scattered residences before 1651. On December 7, 1725 "the town, by a major vote, signifies their willingness that the inhabitants of Kent, Belden's Hill and Chestnut Hill, and so upwards, become a parish by themselves, if the General Court shall see meet so to establish them." The Act so creating it was passed by the Court on May 12, 1726. Wilton became a town in 1802.

There are Wilton's in four of the English shires, but the evidence of ancestry points to the one in Somersetshire. Thomas Durston came to Charleston, Massachusetts from Wilton in Somersetshire before 1650.

WINCHESTER: Deriv.: from the Welsh gwent, to enjoy, love, with chester, a Roman camp. One of the last of the towns of the Western Lands to be settled, Caleb Beach was the first to remove here in 1750. Two other families followed before 1758. In 1767 a petition went to the General Court at New Haven asking that residents here—"about eighteen families, containing eighty-two souls" be formed into "a Town with Town privileges". No action was taken by the Court, but a renewal of the request, sent in to the session of May 1771, resulted in an Act "that the said town of Winchester be . . . declared to be one distinct and entire town." This had been formerly known as the Green Woods.

The name is from the cathedral town in Hampshire, England, but there is no evidence that shows reason for the choice, and the name was never officially confirmed except by inclusion. It was in general spoken use, however, soon after its settlement for its first mention in the Colonial Records for May 1761, in an Act relating to the construction of the old North Road, speaks of it as "the said township of Winchester."

WINDHAM: Deriv.: possibly, landing place with a windlass.

This tract was a part of the bequest from Joshua, third son of Uncas, to sixteen gentlemen from Norwich and neighboring towns. (See Mansfield, Hebron, Tolland). The General Court of May 1678 allowed the claim and established the will and Robin Cassasinamon, governor of the surviving Pequots, was commissioned by Uncas to show these gentlemen the bounds of their tract and the lines were run soon after. On the first of May 1686, the Legatees met to receive their allotments, and "after prayers for direction and blessing" drew lots for their respective portions. The first settler was John Coates, an English refugee, in the autumn of 1688, and with the spring of 1689 (See Orange) settlement began to go forward. By 1691, there were thirty families in the Hither-place who petitioned the General Court "that you would grant us a township and call it Windham", which was duly done on May 12, 1692.

The name is from Wymondham (pronounced Windham) parish in Norfolk shire, the home in England of the Ripley, Lincoln and other families, prominent early settlers.

WINDSOR: Each of the three first towns of the Connecticut Colony named itself at the outset for the mother town in Massachusetts. A trading house was built in Connecticut by the English in 1633, at Windsor. The migration that followed in 1635 came mostly from Dorchester, Massachusetts, under the leadership of the Reverend John Warham, and so the new settlement was at first known as Dorchester. At the General Court of February 21, 1636/7, however, the three towns all changed their names. This may have been to avoid duplication out of a deference to the order of the Massachusetts Court of 1635 (See Hartford) that provided that the inhabitants of Watertown remove "provided they remain still under this government." In any event, Newtowne became Hartford, for the neighboring English city and shire from whose vicinity came Thomas Hooker and many of his congregation; Watertowne became Wythersfeild, for a near-by parish also in Essex, and Dorchester ("It is ordered yt the plantacon called Dorchester shalbee called Windsor") for the minicipal and parliamentary borough of Windsor the site of famous Windsor castle on the Thames. (See Wethersfield).

WINDSOR LOCKS: Originally known as Pine Meadow, this was for a time the only place in the Colony where the Connecticut could be forded and as such, was probably used by the companies which came from Massachusetts to Hartford, Wethersfield and Windsor, with which it shares the early settlement. Commercial development began in 1829, with the completion of the Canal built by Hartford business men. A separate town was incorporated in 1854. The name is descriptive.

WOLCOTT: The first settler here was John Alcock of New Haven, who came in 1731, but it was not until 1760 that the people within this territory had become numerous enough to request the privileges of a separate ecclesiastical Society. Waterbury First Society protested and the petition was rejected, as was another in May 1762. The following October, however, the petition was renewed, and thirty-eight persons from the Farmingbury section were allowed to hire preaching for five months in the year. In October 1770, the privileges of a full parish "called and known by the name of Farmingberry" were granted by the General Assembly and organization of the Society took place on November 13, 1770 at the home of Joseph Atkins. It was incorporated as a town in May 1796, when it was named in honor of Oliver Wolcott, Governor of Connecticut from 1796 to 1797.

WOODBIDGE: The first settler here was Richard Sperry, who by 1660 and probably earlier, was operating a farm for Stephen Goodyear, to which he was later given the deed. Petition to form a distinct ecclesiastical Society "subsisting and known by the name of the Parish of Amity" was granted by the General Court of October 1738, and when in 1784 the privileges of a town were secured, the name chosen was that of the first pastor, the Reverend Benjamin Woodbridge.

WOODBURY: Deriv.: fort or dwelling in a wood, or built of wood. The settlement of Woodbury was the result of differences in religious opinions among the inhabitants of Stratford. It "was ushered in by thunderings and lightnings and earthquakes ecclesiastical". An Act of the Legislature of October 1667 granted to a committee from that section "liberty to purchase Potatuke and the lands adjoyneing, to be reserved for a village or plantation." The Pootatuck Indians owned all this territory and the section now Woodbury was known as Pomperaug. To "the afoarsayd Committee" was given power "to order the planting of the same" and the first settlement was begun in 1763 in that part of the present Southbury known as White Oak by the Reverend Zechariah Walker and his congregation. At the end of two years the number of settlers had become sufficient to warrant the Act of the General Court at Hartford granting "that Paumperaug and the plantation there shall be called by the name of Woodbury." The original lands, inaccurately described and in some cases purchased over and over from the Indians, included at least the territory now comprising Southbury, Bethlehem, Washington, Roxbury and Middlebury. The eighth of the -bury towns (See Waterbury) the name was probably in spoken use for a long time before its official confirmation. The name could have been from Woodbury in Devonshire, England.

The Indian name, from the Mohegan pownluckuck, denotes the country about the falls.

WOODSTOCK: Deriv.: place in the woods.

In October 1683, the selectmen of the ancient and influential town of Roxbury, Massachusetts, whose limits were felt to be "scanty and not capable of enlargement" petitioned to the General Court of the Bay Colony for a tract of land in the Nipmuck Country. (See Thompson). The men sent to "spy out" a tract left Massachusetts about the first of April 1686. More than the requisite thirty families were ready to migrate and their first public meeting was held on August 25 of that year. The next spring they broke ground and planted, set up a sawmill, and five of their number were chosen "to order, the prudential affairs of the place, as selectmen." Things were going badly in Massachusetts. Governor Andros had revoked all previous land titles, and the New Roxbury settlers had received no governmental confirmation of their property. Petitions sent with the aid of the mother town received no reply. The Revolution, (See Orange) establishing William and Mary upon the throne of England was hailed with great joy in the New Roxbury settlement and a town meeting on January 13, 1690 voted to ask the Massachusetts General Assembly for the privileges of a township and to give the town a name. On March 15, 1690, it was enacted "that the name of the plantation granted to Roxbury be Woodstock", and the town so incorporated. In 1713 it was declared to be a part of Connecticut.

An entry from the diary of the Honorable Samuel Sewall records "this day, March 18, 1690, I gave New Roxbury the name of Woodstock because of its nearness to Oxford, for the sake of Queen Elizabeth and the notable meetings that have been held at the place bearing the name in England."

Nipmuck from nippe, fresh water; nip amaug, fishing-place.

WAR JOB TRAINING FACILITIES

War job training facilities have been provided by Federal, State and private agencies. The Manufacturers Association of Connecticut, 436 Capitol Avenue, Hartford, has acted as a liaison office in keeping the training facilities currently informed of the exact nature of the training that most closely meets the needs of industry. The increased employment of women has been a factor of growing importance in the training program.

ENGINEERING, SCIENCE, MANAGEMENT WAR TRAINING PROGRAM.—Regional Adviser, L. E. Seeley, Yale University,

New Haven. The work is on the college level but admission requirements cover both academic qualifications and work experience. Tuition is free, costs being defrayed by Federal funds. Student pays for textbooks and for instruments for drawing courses. Courses are arranged both for persons on a job and for pre-job training. Application for admission should be made directly to one of the institutions offering the desired course. A personal interview is required.

The courses offered are short and intensive. The subject matter covers various fields of engineering, drafting, tool and machine design, production control, cost control, motion and time study, estimating, inspection of materials, industrial electricity, industrial chemistry, welding, metallurgy, ballistics, personnel supervision, cartography, mathematics, rubber technology and others as the need arises.

The institutions at present connected with the program are:

THE CONNECTICUT STATE APPRENTICESHIP COUNCIL in cooperation with the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship.—The permanent purpose of this program is to train skilled workers who will become competent craftsmen. It is based upon apprenticeship with an organized program of job experience supplemented by related technical instruction. The field representatives also provide advice and help on apprenticeship and training to any interested plant or labor organization.

Today, because of the acute demand for all types of workers, services have been extended to less than apprenticeship level, and field representatives will give assistance in the establishment of training programs for workers doing only part of a recognized trade.

Persons or plants interested in this form of training should address John T. Hayes, Connecticut State Apprenticeship Council, State Office Bldg., Hartford, or Perley M. Hovey, Room 310, Post Office Bldg., Bridgeport.

CONNECTICUT STATE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

—This program offers both pre-employment and supplementary training at the State Trade Schools and many of the High Schools. Courses offered vary as the needs arise. They cover such subjects as airplane engine assembly, aircraft inspection, automatic screw machine, blueprint reading, welding, machine assembly, parachute making, tool and die making, etc.

For information see the local trade or high school principal or address Augustus S. Boynton, Director of Vocational Education, Department of Education, State Office Bldg., Hartford.

TRAINING WITHIN INDUSTRY—WAR PRODUCTION BOARD.—This is a service available to all war production contractors and subcontractors. It is specially directed toward helping those who instruct workers on the job, group leaders, sub-foremen, lead men, job setters, etc. The training is given in brief sessions at a time convenient to the plant and to the workers. The cost is deferred out of Federal funds.

For information apply to the District Representative, Room 513, 152 Temple St., New Haven.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION.—The primary function of the Out-of-School Work Program of the National Youth Administration for Connecticut has been the training of young men and young women between 16 and 24 years of age inclusive for jobs in war industries. Second in importance to this has been the production of goods and services for war agencies, those on the home front as well as those actually doing the fighting. Work centers in Stamford, New Haven, Waterbury, Danielson, Hartford, Burlington, and Norwich, the latter three having residence facilities, have provided youth of this state, young women on equal terms with young men, with an opportunity for specialized work experience and intensive shop training in several occupational fields, including machine shop, sheet metal, welding, industrial sewing, drafting, woodworking, graphic reproduction and radio. There have also been hospital assistance and clerical service projects. Youth have been paid $21.00 or $25.00 per month depending on type of project and total hours of work experience and training.

A major activity since July 1, 1941 has been, with the cooperation of the United States Employment Service, the placement of NYA trained youth from twenty-six other states in Connecticut war industries, filling jobs for which labor of the type required was otherwise unavailable. Since that time more than 4,830 young men have filled vital war production jobs, meeting the requirements of employers both as to specialized training and physical standards.

These placements are in addition to the turnover of 6,500 Connecticut youth to similar jobs in private industry. The NYA not only trains and places youth but also locates suitable rooms, arranges for treatment of sickness, makes provisions for getting tools on credit, answers inquiries and requests from home states, and to the extent necessary, provides counseling.

Production in NYA shops has been diversified. It includes many thousand items such as special studs, flat head screws, angle plates for the Brooklyn and Portsmouth Navy Yards, milling cutters, reamers, special cabinets, ventilating equipment for the U. S. Submarine Base, New London, mattress covers for the Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot, semaphore signal flags for U. S. Navy Signal Training Unit, police clubs, dummy guns, pails, metal arm and leg splints, arm bands and insignia, posters and signs for civilian defense organizations.

CONNECTICUT COLLEGE, New London.—Connecticut College offers an eight weeks' War Session for both men and women, June 29—August 22, 1942.

Courses are planned, in general for three groups: first, those who wish to go into war jobs immediately as secretaries, chemical analysts, accountants, statisticians, or in child care centers; second, those who wish to shorten the time for their college degree, who may take courses offered for college credit; and a third group, older women, college alumnae as well as others, who may have had jobs at one time but who have been out of the business or teaching world and now wish a short course as a "refresher" so as to be ready to do their part in the war effort.

The advice of industrial firms, the United States Civil Service Commission, and the State Department of Education, determine what courses should be offered.

For information address, Office of the President, Connecticut College, New London.
